Chapter One: The Funquisition

The Funquisition's goons just tried to confiscate my cock. There's nothing like being a medal-spangled veteran from a World War as frumpy as the third Vaginal Apocalypse to attract thug punches like a nun at a cross-burning. Like, I might take a morning constitutional down my local street, smelling the roses, necking my ahem 'Bovril' and jangling the aforementioned medals pinned across my breast. I'd amble past the usual gangs of 'roided-up thugs, with their police-badge knuckledusters flashing in the sun.

And all they do is whinge! Nothing but "yo lads incoming one-poof pride parade check it out," and "It's the re-education gulags for you m'laddo," and "Fuckfuck he knotted our willies together, run like hell in the same direction you fools," and "We'll be good boys sir, may we please have our prostates back?"

Kids, eh? When you've par-tayed for an entire century in a wee outfit called the Royal Marines Sex Commandos, when you've battled the hawttest and most formidable Sexy soldiers on Earth, you brush off lightweight dandruff like them without even breaking a sweat. Maybe I should stop moonwalking past their precincts, wagging my wrinkly ol' patoot as bait. They're only human!

More the others in our Underground I'm worried about, and why I'm banging this screed out now. The Funquisition point out that the 20th Century's three vast erotic tussles have each tattooed humongous emotional welters across humanity's soul. They insist that although their provocateur ain't us Brits but bloody France, the exquisite martial and/or marital seduction techniques championed by yours truly have brought civilisation to its knees.

They hint loudly that Sex Commando emeritusses like me might perhaps chillax and convalesce and halt the unconscionable corruption of today's youth.

I mean yeah they've got a point. Ever tried to fuck neutronium through nine stacked refractory periods? I managed it during Hell Week¹, but you just trash yourself still further. These days the world has become a quivering scarlet wreck of overstimulated erectile tissue.

Thing is, the Funquisition's "chillax and convalesce" is everyone else's "imprison and brainwash anyone opposing soul-numbing dead-bedroom marriage".

And holy shit is it working. No-one these days knows how to pleasure a lovely orifice. Their pillow talk? Shit m8. Spooning? Abysmal. Knowledge of matching rose varieties to wines? Awful. Matching cocks with appropriate throats?

I'd better contextualise these footnotes. They crack me up but that's it. You can skip the lot and miss nothing truly important. It's a maxim I embraced after reading 50ftcl.it/for-the-emperor, and discovering the hard way that jumping between text and footnotes a gazillion times utterly karate-chopped my reading flow. No disrespect to the book itself, by the way, it's a cheerful ol' romp.

Simply ghastly. Perfumes to poetries? Horrid d00d! It's all coming to bits! Today's young'uns are sloppy even on sex itself, let alone Sex Commando-ing. I might blab about, say, the Hump Summit², and they'd gawk like I'd clambered from the Four Yorkshiremen³ sketch. It's appalling.

So I figured I'd fight back.

I figured I'd write this.

It concerns the third Vaginal Apocalypse, way the hell back in 1974. This one's a tall tale, so strap in, baby.

A French female once straddled the world. Her name was Brigitte Bardot. She first modelled, then actressed, then transitioned to animal rights activism, sociology, biology, genetics, genetic engineering, cyberneticism, your classic cackling mad science, weekend dictating, then actual professional politicking. She sought then won France's Presidency. She resurrected France's tantric war-phwoar. She created and claimed the title 'Imperatrix' (Latin for 'empress'; can't deny Latin sounds cooler.) She threatened a third Vaginal Apocalypse. (Never heard of the first two? Read on, grasshoppah.)

For the third bloody time in a century, she stood

² It was a diplomatic summit in 1816: "Good god Sexy warfare is amazing. Let us construct a sturdy legal footing: henceforth, if Army A attacks Army B without the happy consent of every member of both A and B, that's a war crime! We may be savages but we're not barbarians. Healthy sex yo." More later.

resplendent atop a vast fearsome Frog⁴gy war machine bent on conquering the world in general and the British Empire in particular. Five million leashed Frogs spat hate across the Channel and bawled invasion-y dread. An invasion so humongous and gruesome that even the Empire's own war planners admitted would trounce us in three short months.

So we Sex Commandos figured we'd nip that shit in the bud.

We figured we'd sneak a stealthy strike force into Paris; we'd pulverise Bardot; and we'd thus ensure France wouldn't be a threat in our or anyone's lifetimes.

One out of three ain't bad, right?

⁴ A few American readers have asked the meaning of 'frog': it's the standard nickname for the French: 50ftcl.it/frog

Chapter Two: The Stroppiest Frogs In Christendom

“For God’s sake, Private Kowalsky, get down from that luggage rack!”

“Sorry, Mike,” I replied, sliding back into my bus seat with a clatter. Seventy other Sex Commandos squirted subtle glances in my direction. “It’s just—”

“Yeah I know. Abducting the Imperatrix is your first official mission as a Sex Commando. ‘Course you’re jittery. Christ. I bloody was on my first. Who isn’t? But you’ll be no good on tonight’s raid this spazzy.” Mike’s craggy glare softened a tad. “Finish that letter to your folks. Might soothe you.”

Right.

“I’ll try to describe the typical Parisian,” I eventually scribbled in my well-thumbed notebook, then stared out the bus window. Muffled applause and cheering from assorted exterior crowds spooed right back. “... And, it’s possible you’ll not think me off my rocker. First, a reference point familiar to all: remember Ole Tobi challenging her cousin to that duel a few years back? If you don’t, the grievance was over her cousin’s wedding tuxedo: allegedly her specific choice of tailoring style was the ever so scandalous Demure Immaculate Emeritus XII, and not the more chaste NASCAR Bridezilla Jug-A-Licious Slut Contest. Her hemline exceeded by an inch the ‘Unconscionable Jezebelite Harpy Threshold’, as dictated by, by ...”

Aah. Shit. I frowned.

“How do you spell ‘unconscionable’?” I enquired of Mike. “Thanks,” I replied, scribble scribble, err, “‘Unnkawnshinnibil ...’, as dictated by Vatican IV. The duel devolved into your classic riot, claiming fifty-nine wedding guests, six kegs of communion JD, and two thousand roundshot. It soon became an four-year feud, peaking at that inter-Papacy football match against the Washington Whiteskins, where both sides’ fans fought an actual line infantry musket battle. Most never got their hearing back. It only resolved a year ago with the landmark legal ruling of Papacy Of City-of-Jackson v. Apparently A Pack Of Complete Bastards: ‘I cannot believe I had to flatten both your cathedrals with my monster truck to get you dickheads round a table.’ All over an inch of décolletage ...”

I sucked my pencil, lost in thought, staring at outside’s fabulous visual bounties. Three femme-Frogs popped.

“But ship these feuders here to Paris? Their heads would explode. I remain astounded mine hasn’t. Half would think they’d quite literally died and gone to Hell. The other half would think they’d ascended to Heaven. Their relationship with anything even faintly sexual is, is—”

“—Need help spelling ‘sex’?” asked Mike, smirking over my shoulder.

“Need help spelling ‘fourth prenup’?” I retorted without thinking.

His smirk perished. “Aah sorry,” I added, “bit below-the-belt? Come on, if you kick off your, what do you Poms say, your ‘banter’, you gotta expect comebacks.”

M’colleague Staff Sergeant Michael Donovan glowered at me. One of my Sex Commando genetic bio-upgrades informed me his glower-duration clocked in at four hundred and nine milliseconds.

But then he cracked up in a hearty guffaw. “The rookie has a point!” His eyes went twinkly. “But we’d been bussing across France for a whole week,” he added. “What’s with you making yet another million edits to your letter?”

“Well no Brit strike force in the last decade had ever infiltrated and then escaped French soil,” I replied. “In the last week, we’ve witnessed a million wonders. I’d not even known where to start.”

On cue, much cheering and applause ebbed from the boulevard outside. Savage splats of rainbowed gunk splattered our ride’s windows, accompanied by flurries of flower petals and clatterings of coins. I think some might have been aimed at our tour bus in particular, but likely was intended for the vastly wider city-wide military parade brouhaha-ing around us. The more vibrant-shaded gunk started chemo-gnawing into the glass with much bubbling and smoking. Seemly fragrances of hyacinth and turps and bubblegum wafted forth. The ladies womanning Requisition back home had assured the rest of us that this bus model was designed to withstand precisely that, nice thick windows, since apparently urban faithful spaffing over their clerics' ride is a Froggy tradition since time immemorial, so these pelvic alkaline airstrikes didn't rattle us much. At least the old hands surrounding me weren't rattled. I sure as hell wasn't going to kick off rattling under their eye. "The Bible Belter Papacies are opening back up to the world," I remarked, "and they're as thirsty for European news as us."

"Speak for yourself." My colleague glanced through the luvverly wholesome acid clouds into the bright Parisian sun and thence yonder. "Oh good god. Please don't tell me you're describing to your hometown's zombies those duelling hundred-male anal chains bracketing that Arc de Triomphe?" He brightened and cackled. "When you read your letter to 'em, can I watch?"

"They've got to learn about anal chains eventually, right?" I retorted.

"L—learn? Mate. My ears still ache from the sounds you'd produced on your first proper morning with us."

"Er. Those experiences all kind of blurred together, could you be more specific?"

"You know. Bridget showed you rookies how to fold a bowling ball in half using only the left side of her left areola."

"That was months ago!" I exclaimed. "Learned tons since. Eternal student mode, that's what Sergeant Stefan says."

Mike shrugged, then nodded. "Yeah, wise," he agreed.

He stared up and down the bus. Seventy further Sex Commandos thronged it. The starboard half observed the exterior Froggy chaining with immense interest. Most too jotted notes. He nodded again. “Yeah. Wise indeed. All of it. I don’t mind telling you.” He craned his head this way and that to absorb more fully the city views. “Drink it in while we can.”

I couldn’t agree more. I gave up on my report and happily surrendered to the vistas. Holy shit. Was there nothing these mad Parisians didn’t do ginormous? They made Texians⁵ look like bonsai protons.

Turns out Paris has boulevards a hundred freakin’ metres wide. A hundred! Room aplenty for parades. Columns of stout soldiery could and did march fifty abreast with ease, crowds heaving each side, with room for four lanes of traffic each way. I leaned out the tour bus window far as I could, get maximum viewing from maximum angles, and immediately regretted it. Man. The crowds! The noise! My ears started ringing. Another genetic bio-upgrade autoinitialised and sealed my eardrums shut. The din diminished. Aahhh. That’s better. I returned my attentions to Parisian civics.

Geez. I’d originally attributed the boulevards’ constructions to their Imperatrix’s literally monumental ambitions, but no: colleagues soon bawled at me from deeper within the communal vehicle, between superb sweat-soaked salvos of chin-ups, dips, tactical flirting, thumbing through copious notes and intel, squats, deadlifts, edgings, the warming-up of jaws, forearms, tongues, hearts and throats for the desperate brawl ahead, that these thoroughfares predated her by over a century.

A century! Actually you know what, it really showed. Our intel notes denoted these bloody huge streets as ‘Haussmann Boulevards’, designed by a Froggy fella of that name. Gawrsh. Immense trees lined their centres: kauri and larch, sycamore and macrocarpa, pōhutukawa and eucalyptus, fertile prizes from the Metropole’s Empire beyond the seas.

What a sight! The parade and our tour bus were both a fair ways from Paris’s centralmost bits. Serious skyscraperings loomed heavenward. Most sported the slender steel-glass vibe of your classic soulless corporationny redoubts. A surprising chunk didn’t: morbid brutalist concrete. You could just tell their landladies had no intention of allowing either exterior observers intruding or interior denizens extruding. Man. Secrecy supreme. Their vibe wasn’t much like your standard prisons though. You site prisons in your realm’s out-of-the-way armpits, don’t you, you sure as hell wouldn’t pick your Empire’s shiniest flashiest downtown-iest bits. Didn’t add up. The morbid structures didn’t seem abandoned neither, instead throbbed with activity. Crowds and vehicles boiled in and out, same as the residential boulevard facades towering around us.

I shoved my head further from the tour bus window and drank in the views, attempting to and succeeding in flolloping my tongue like a spaniel, earning guffaws from neighbours.

And, shit, from quite a few paradegoers outside too. Best maintain my disguise, right?

“Shag, shag you heathens,” I therefore roared in my atrocious Louisiana French (long story) at the parade crowds. I brandished my disguise’s turgid crucifix. “Perform your oral duties! France commands you!”

The bayings deafened me anew.

“Thro’le u’ buck, ye’ bumpo’!” another colleague said, reclining on the bus seat opposite mine. The hell? I’m sure my brow went all squirly. Was that even English? The female Sex Commando emitted a boisterous laugh. “Ye’ll gi’ oos awaee!” Her neighbours joined in, Mike included. I pulled my head back in and latched the bus window firmly shut. “Er, sorry, Bridget,” I replied, wincing, “still having trouble with your accent, could you ...?”

Another round of laughs. Bridget cackled. “My accent?” she countered. “Says the bloke gargling Dixie treacle 24/7!” With this riposte, though, she now enunciated each word more slowly and clearly. Her eye-twinkles redoubled. Half Bridget’s neighbours cracked up a third time; half semi-smirked yet applied unto her significant stink-eye. The latter seemed more foreign and presumably accent-y.

My jaw flopped open. “Oh come on! My accent isn’t that bad!”

“Only after weeks of nagging! You can take the good ole boy out of the Belt, but ...”

I gave up and joined in the laughs. “Okay fair. But what did you actually say just now?”

“I said of your priestly Raw Phwoar routine: throttle it back, you bampot, you’ll give us away!”

I applied serious strokey-chin-scratchies to assist in pondering this, then nodded. “Gotta keep up appearances tho, eh?” I replied. “We’re a French Catholic convent, here to cheer on France’s finest!” I chuckled, stood, re-opened the window, screamed Frenchly “Last to spunk is a Brit,” latched it shut again, muffling not only marathon paradegoer shagging kicking off outside, but more importantly muffling me from them, allowing me to then safely declare, “We couldn’t possibly be Brit operatives.”

“Next you’ll be spouting ‘ooh la la’, ya bloody mong,” said Mike. He removed his wimple, brushed scraggly black hair away from his eyes, applied spectacular forehead scratchies, leaned his head back to drape his hair backward, replaced his wimple such that his hair remained pinned to his head and out of his eyes, then glared enthusiastically at me from beneath its floppy brim. Now he resembled a negligee housing Optimus Prime. “Mate,” he added, scowling, “Keep it subtle. We all know you love showing off for the Sheilas, but even Frogs will smell a rat eventually.”

Fair fair. “All right, Mike,” I agreed, as I resumed my seat and produced a notebook. “Subtle, you say.” Write write jot. “You reckon these disguises will blend us in?”

The strike force had arrived in France proper as busloads of nuns and monks from an allegedly spectacularly prudish Catholic convent lurking at the headwaters of the Rhine and calling themselves The Knights of Raw Phwoar. They represented the rock-bottom of France's libido hierarchy, and had been famed for centuries as being perhaps the stroppiest Frogs in Christendom. Even by their standards. They'd chuck Vaseline and iron filings into orgies. They'd swap the labels on lube and superglue⁶. They'd Frisbee coat hangers into prenatal classes. Curmudgeons, whiners, cranks, and with libidos to match. Superbly trained Anglo-pros such as we could match their grouchy Gallic rumpy pumpy and blend in with only the occasional burst aorta.

Mike grimaced at me, then shrugged and scratched his balls with audible rasping-sounds. "Blend in?" he said. "How should I know? Are these parades a special holiday, or do the locals do this shit daily?"

"Oh surely it's a special event," I said, glanced at my notebook, glanced outside. "Look at that! Another prisoner train!"

"Another one?" he said. "'Struth!"

A chunky train of multi-trailer trucks could be seen some way off, decreasingly hazy with closeness. The trucks trundled through the military parades, open and breezy and metal-barred. Inside were thousands upon thousands of prisoners-of-war, sullen, gloomy, standing room only, spread across hundreds of truck trailers, and apparently sorted by nationality, for each trailer had a different realm's flag flapping above.

⁶ Oh all right then. Here's one:

"My girlfriend mistook my superglue for her lipstick. She's still not talking to me!"

The neighbouring crowds' vibes twanged uniquely based on nationality. Oh wow. I had to get these down. Write jot jot. Persian and Armenian jailbirds induced jovial reactions, with greetings and flirtings and gifts passed through the bars. Similar with Nigerians, Sudanese and Malinese, the crowds loved Africans for some reason. Impromptu volleyball games kept kicking off. Burmese, Korean and Ukrainian folk received stony ambivalence. Crowd favourites seemed to be good-sized gangs of Te Wai Pounamu Māori, not least because the Brit-esque P.O.W.s in question were revelling in kicking off serious bants with corresponding clutches⁷ of Froggy Te Ika-a-Māui Māori lining the parades. Flirting, standup comedy, jokes, rap battling, even impromptu hakas, gay ol' time had by all.

“‘Struth,” Mike said again. He grimaced and this time scratched his mutton chops. “Ninth procession this hour. How many prisoners in this latest train, d’y’reckon?” He glanced at my notebook and smirked.

“Six thousand,” Bridget said, “at least.”

“Bloomin’ ’eck; hardly something you’d wish down Piccadilly!”

“Lucky Britain and France are still stickin’ to unofficial scuffles!” Bridget added. “Actual war would be about fifty times worse.”

“What? Really?” I exclaimed without thinking. “Thousands of prisoners yet Britain and France aren’t warring?”

Their heads turned. I bit my lip but persevered. “How ... like, how does that work? Back home in the Belt, fifty thousand P.O.W.s is often your enemy’s entire Army. If you ever have this perpetual under-the-radar pseudo-feuding, sorry, under-the-R.D.F., it means someone’s seriously messed up.”

“Under-the-R.D.F.?” asked Mike, frowning. “What do you mean?”

“You know. All this creeping around. Feels passive-aggressive. Can’t you just ... like, you know, when I was a lad we’d say ‘man up’: you stand tall, you stare the other bloke in the eye, say your piece to his face, he says his, fight kicks off and concludes fast, black eye or whatever apiece, winner buys loser a pint, and all agree both parties have now become, how do you Poms phrase it, ‘chuffed to bits’? Why not here?”

Bridget and Mike met eyes. Bridget seemed bemused,

Mike frazzled. He stared back at first my notebook then at me, ran his fingers through his hair, and shrugged. “We all get you grew up in that Belt place across the pond, kiddo, but vulgar brawls ain’t how Europe’s Powers do shit.”

“Don’t tell me,” I said, resisting the urge to roll my eyes. “This Brit way is ‘civilized,’ yeah?”

“Commonwealth way, but yeah pretty much.”

“Right. Zero black eyes between countries since ... what’s Sex Commando milcomm jargon ... since that second Vaginal Apocalypse thing back in the ‘40s. Right?” I gestured out the window. “But look at the result! Pent-up aggro, zillions of prisoners. Geez, fella. If war kicks off now, we’ll have far worse than black eyes. How has Bardot pulled this off? How can you make these excuses?”

Mike flushed and grimaced. He narrowed his eyes and stared stonily at me. Aargh.

“Easy, Mike!” said Bridget, and clasped his forearm. “You and I an’ the other committee members wud never have approved his mission attendance uf he’d no’ had the smarts to spo’ these inconsistencies. Do allow him the luxury o’ brathood.” She winked at me.

Mike’s stare still hadn’t left mine. “... In six hours,” he said eventually, “we can all ask the Imperatrix in person.” His other hand patted Bridget’s clasp-hand.

She visibly relaxed. He swivelled his stare over to her. “And you’re infuriatingly sharp when on half-ration Chardonnay, you know that?” His stare softened. She hiccuped. He shrugged. "But well yeah. Should serious shit kick off now ..." He glanced outside at the P.O.W. throngs, then up and down the faux-nun bus, then back to me, then he winced. "Mate. Why do you think we're here?"

"If you'd not spent yesterday's briefings sucking off Private Thirsk, Charlie dear," Bridget pointed out, scowling albeit twinkling her eyes, "you'd know Downing Street is counting on us to detain and defang Bardot before the Foreign Office kick off their latest negotiations. Sergeant Stefan says jaw-jaw becomes even better than war-war after you'd nicked the enemy's boss."

"And," Mike added, "we might get Bardot to tell us how she'd returned France from wreck to Great Power in five years."

"... Right." I nodded, brow scrunchy, all contemplative-like. "Yeah that makes sense." Notebook notebook scribble scribble. I glanced out the window. Our minutes of chit-chat had brought the bus far closer to the truck train. The prisoners were singing something. "And our Britain and Mississippi folk might avoid joining that lot."

"You got it," Mike repeated, scowling again, then paused, shrugged and grinned. "You catch on eventually."

Bridget broke off from staring out the window. "I was wrong," she declared, "this latest train is easily twice as big as the last lot." She resumed her staring. "And look! Prussians!"

Great googly moogly why yes Prussians. Apparently France and Prussia hated each others' guts; at that point in my life I knew sweet fudge-all about why. Blah blah blah 1870-1 Franco-Prussian War, blah blah blah France will rise again. Or something. Out came the notebook. One particular national group stood within their prisoner transports at stony-stoic parade ground attention. Hissing and booing erupted pretty much continuously from surrounding civilians. Assorted hotheads hurled fruit. The Prussian soldiery for the most part refused to be provoked and just withstood it.

Dear god. I scratched my head. “What’s Prussia done,” I mused, “to earn that?”

“You don’t know?” Mike said. “You been living in a cave— right,” he chuckled, “the Bible Belt, close enough—”

—The bright blue afternoon sky wumped vivid scarlet.

A horrid bloom blazed overhead, followed by a sonic crack of detonating warhead. Then another, and more, and still more, and soon half the sky crack-crack-cracked like Satan’s popcorn. Horrid radiance wummed everywhere.

Shouts of alarm rang up and down the bus. “What’s that?” cried dozens of colleague’d throats.

The airborne cracks continued for about twenty seconds, then died at last. The echoes reverberated among the Haussmann facades, followed swiftly by a tripling of bitter civvie ire towards the Prussians and only the Prussians. The Prussian prisoners became rather animated and vibrant and started trading insults with their abusers.

“Both sides expected that!” Bridget exclaimed.

“Prussian artillery corps historical strongest most strong,” another colleague intoned, a few rows up the bus aisle. “Strike Paris from afar Rhine.”

“From artillery? Five hundred kilometres?” I exclaimed. “Hell of a range—!”

“—Jeezus,” Mike said, smirking between his mutton chops, “never heard of Prussia’s Bukkake Blitzkrieg gun batteries? Mate! Call yourself a marine?”

“Well yeah,” I retorted, “last trimester’s siegecraft training had only got to Ottoman Sultana Alex’s lesbian Lesbian⁸ Orban Bombards. One thing at a time, yeah?”

Mike shrugged. “Fair point,” he agreed.

I scowled at him. “Course it is,” I nodded. “But yeah, the ... ? I know ‘bukkake’ from my Nihon pelvic marksmanship evening classes, but refresh me on ‘blitzkrieg’? Sounds German ... er, er, ‘fast fight’?”

“Not bad,” Mike said. “Ask Hiromi.” He nodded at the colleague who’d first mentioned Prussian artillery. “Her family corporation helped build ‘em.”

I turned to face the Sex Commando who’d mentioned Prussian artillery. “You did?” I asked her. “What kind of ordinance do they fire?”

The sky’s horrid crimson radiance died away. Standard blueness returned, apart from hundreds of smoky airborne spider-anuses fanning in all directions, perhaps a kilometre up, if I’m any judge, which I abso-friggin’-lutely am. They clogged ever more of the sky, reducing the chirpy blue to shit grey. Descending payload puffed onto every surface. Looked like white phosphorus, though if that were the case the fumes would be literally decimating the crowds rather than just irking them. They unfurled a gazillion umbrellas, with much fist-shaking skyward.

The female Sex Commando flicked a wide-eyed glance at me, only me, huh, then craned her head up, staring intently at the expanding smoke trails. "... Chemical burst canisters," she replied at last. She frowned, contemplative, then cracked a window open and sniffed. "Tear gas. Blackcurrant and ... snifsnif elderberry. My family design prestige antiquity. Never dream they target myself!"

"What? Why would the Prussians use blackcurrant flavouring?" I asked her.

Hiromi looked stony and frazzled. "Only munition remain," she said.

Right. The parade heaved on.

But oh dear. One of the trucks housed—

"—Those ones are Brits," said Bridget, open-mouthed and pointing.

Seventy Sex Commandos commenced tremendous bums-on-seats shuffles to get better views.

"Brits?" I asked. "More pent-up aggro victims?"

She frowned. The Sex Commando scratched her pregnant belly. Her hand's callus accumulation made rasprasp noises. "I fear so," she replied. Her frown deepened.

“... I think I recognise some.”

Perhaps eighty P.O.W.s. I couldn't see any Sex Commandos specifically, but the Poms in question were almost certainly from the wider Army. Or Navy? Can't really tell when all they wear is white-black-striped prisoner garb.

Though holy crap. The crowds went friggin' insane. Their Prussian reaction was nothing compared to this ...

... Actually only kind of insane. I mean sure, parts of it did. Other bits seemed less passionate at abusing Brits specifically, until literally browbeaten into doing so by their, hint hint, more patriotic neighbours.

The parallel-driven troop transports' occupants followed suit, in a chain reaction of civic douchebaggery. Geez. In all fairness, several cordon lines of both military police and regular police lining the parade were attempting to restore order, though not getting very far. Argh. I could barely even imagine what it'd like to be one of those prisoners. Poor bastards!

But you'd better believe the fury-browed glare of patriot peer pressure became turned against the Knights of Raw Phwoar.

“Hoped it wouldn't come to this,” grimaced Mike. He glared up and down the bus, then settled on me. “Kid. You'd volunteered to be our spokesmale. Get to it.”

My tummy wobbled. “What do you mean?”

“You know what I mean. You'd volunteered for PR: pull us Knights' patriotic weight with these crowds.”

Crap. I glanced at the prisoner truck, now merely ten metres distant. I hated to admit it, but Mike was right. There was a knight-esque-nuns-shaped hole in this parade component's anti-Brit vibe. We were getting suspicious stares.

Well shit. Tummy churning, I clambered to my feet, wrenched the window open, shouted something at our captured colleagues, no idea what, but it seemed to mollify the audience.

I pulled my head back in, window shut, back on my butt, heart in my boots.

“Good man,” said Mike, and looked away.

And that seemed to be that.

“Where’s tha’ other Shiraz keg? hic I ain’t off ma’ trolley jus’ yet!”

The parade continued. Civvie traffic lanes throbbed parallel. Oceanic queues of, er, I squinted, ‘Peugeots’, barped monotonic melodies, belching smog and sparks and backfiring. Directly behind and ahead loomed great honkin’ troop transports, thronged with endless oodles of military babes and/or hunks. Accompanying these behemoths flocked various achingly erotic field guns; cervical cannon; self-propelled artillery; new-fangled Gauss guns; old-fangled mortars: the sublime martial medley swarmed the multi-storey transports in their millions like extra-thirsty mosquitos buzzing vigil around the plumpest buttocks in Christendom. You name it, chances are France somewhere flaunts it.

Though awesome, talking shop might lift our spirits. My team-mates ran a gazillion professional gazes across the lot, and I got note-jotting. The folks back home will never believe this! The personnel therein seemed convulsed with excitement and brouhaha, directed not at us, but at a series of colossal smoke columns emanating from below the Haussmann urban horizons.

“I hope our diversion works, like,” said another neighbouring ladyfriend, Joan. Whilst swapping barbs with Mike I’d been craning over her shining ponytail: awkward, sure, but one new character at a time. Joan reminded me daily of a chirpy twitchy-schnozzed ferret. She glanced up from her intel papers and bored stare-holes out her window at the smokestacks. “I hear last night the Bomber Command gals lost nine stratofortresses.”

“‘S already workin’,” chirped a reply from the seat behind. Another buddy. Dave. We’ve got heaps to get through so here’s a one-sentence summary: an even beautifuller Lothario rocking vestment and scripture until he opens his goddamn mouth; a Milhouse-esque dweeb-0 dork thereafter. You’ll see what I mean. Dave leaned forward and affection-squeezed Joan’s right shoulder and my left. “I mean. Look!”

This fiftieth troop transport clanked and backfired and ejaculated phat sparks from its vertical tailpipes and jostled its occupants like ice in a martini shaker, who judging by their behaviours were no less sozzled. They gesticulated with unquenchable excitement at the distant smoke columns.

“Check out these latest Frogs! They’re goin’ nuts!”

Dave wasn’t wrong. British Intelligence had pondered long and hard about how best to sneak several hundred of us Sex Commandos into the heart of France, which to-day, deep into today’s Funquisition malarkey, we’d no doubt compare unfavourably to the Hermit Queendom of North Korea.

Despite MI-6’s best efforts, despite the occasional success of our Raw Phwoar Cathol-camo, France was in general still an utter black box, jungly and impenetrable, like hippie brunette bush. Bardot had clamped her Empire shut. She called it the Velvet Vice.

We Brits couldn’t pry its entrances apart! Giant armies of British spies attempted to enter the place constantly: elite male-stallions, the pride of MI-6, would swim incognito across the Channel daily, jaunt friskily up handy-looking beaches, encounter random beach-comber matriarch grannies, gnarled and hunched from the toil of centuries, who’d instantly pile on the intruders like bees on a hornet and hump them to immaculate undulatey death.

It’s the people! The culture! Tens of millions of desperately beautiful men and women coax great wumps of scorching longing from ya. Martial hunks and/or thundersluts like cough us may cultivate intense bouts of the stuff ourselves, for ‘tis our profession and we happen to be bloody amazing at it, but our competence comes from year after brutal year of back-breaking and brow-sweating training.

Frogs tho? They seemed to be simply born with it:

effortless, wafting, ethereal sensuality. Paris's very air seemed effervescent with gorgeousness, it seemed to waft up from pavement grilles and make everyone shimmery and flushed and hawt hawt hawt.

It made you develop that really nice yearning. You know how it is when you meet someone both significantly cooler than you are, and beautiful inside and out? You throb with the desire to become a better person, to be worthy of them and their attraction. The thought swelled my spirits. Already I was feeling better. I smiled.

That's what downtown Paris was doing to me, and judging by the ogling expressions on most of the others, them too.

But don't get me wrong. Mad respect for a skilled enemy, but an enemy nonetheless. I could only imagine the effect on London of vast roiling clouds of evil Parisian delight. It had to go.

"Our diversion's already working," I declared, clapping a hand on Joan's shoulder. "We're deep inside Paris, aren't we?" I glanced out the window. Another Army troop transport. This lot rocked cobalt-chrome spandex crotchless eight-piece tuxedos. That's actually kind of awesome: I made a mental note to obtain a few when all this nonsense was over. "Oo. 'Scuse me." I stood, reopened the window and roared out at them.

"Tuez tous les anglais, garçons!" I roared, [Fuck the English, boys!], brandishing my disguise-crucifix. The soldier truckload gave me a cheer, signs of the Cross, a chorus of crotch-thrusts, and ran fingers across their throats with appropriate menace.

She gave me a concerned smile and patted my hand. “Champion, pet,” she said, “but we’re not there yet, Chas. Don’t get carried away.”

The girl stared heavy-lidded at the undulating Frogs. One of Joan’s several specialties was mastery of masculineesque physiology. I knew from vigorous experience she could glance at a mob of football hooligans, deduce how to handjob the lot into snoozy oblivious blissy-bliss in five seconds flat, then execute the same in a second five secs.

“Mad tactics, like,” she mused. “Proper beltas! But clumsy. Bet they think grit alone can replace technical skill. I could fell the lo’ in three minutes.”

“You and your ego! You couldn’t!”

“Shu’ your gob, done it me whole life!” She pouted, mock-affronted. “Before this Commando lark I mistressed crowd control for Newcastle United! I never told you that?”

“No, never,” I said sarcastically. “Slay football hooligans? A wee chit like you?”

“You shut your gob!” She squealed again, smirking. She squeezed my crotch and started caressing, mmm, skilled! Her fingers twinkled a delicate dance around my phattening chub. “You askin’ for a second demo?” she said, eyes sparkling. “Take you down like I took down that Man U mob?”

“Your handjobs are like tyre-changes on Formula One cars,” I grinned, squirming away in my seat. Christ, she really was world-class at this. “I’d ... oohmy, I’d ... not forget them in a hurry.”

“Darn right, and neither will they,” my ladyfriend chuckled, rubbing me gently through my army-casual budgie-smuggler. Warm pleasure ebbed through me, yum. “Hard to riot when you’re spunkin’ blood.” At that image the warmth congealed, aargh. “Eighty Man-U nonnies down in ten minutes. Truly earned me paycheque that day.”

“Clumsy pissheads is ... is, ah, one thing,” I pointed out, squirming like mad against her questing digits, “enemy soldiers are quite another. Unless you want to get ‘em drunk and on a football pitch first?”

“You doylum!” she cackled, swatting me on the shoulder with her free hand. “...Ah, doylum means ‘idiot’,” she added as she beheld my bamboozled squizz, “I keep forgettin’ you’re from Dixie ...” She reached right into my trousers and hooked a finger round the crown.

I chuckled, ragged. “I have ... oooh ... learned many times to exaggerate my emotional cues for your benefit.” Oh that did it. Payback!

Joan gave a brisk nod and her face shone chirpy crimson as I got to work. “Yeah. Gets easier with ... with practice, mm, eventuallyyyyyohhyou devil!” she squeaked. “All right, how wud you take those soldiers out?”

“Let’s see now ...” Hands on yummy autopilot, I began professionally sizing our exterior adversaries up myself. She and I began one of our conversations regarding French-v-British Sexy mastery, one thing led to another, she got all warm and squirmy, so did I, our hands started roaming over each other's bodies, and the time began passing ever so pleasingly.

I adored how neatly her breasts fit into my hands.

We (the Sex Commandos as a whole, not me personally, at this stage of my career I'd not become sufficiently senior to pull my weight with war planning) had pondered long and hard about how to violate France's alleged inviolate security, and settled on requesting Empire Bomber Command to conduct a series of colossal zeppelin leaflet drops upon selected unfortunate and random vineyards about fifty klicks downstream the Seine. Intel bounty from our Nihon allies. Hentai, 'natch', as Dave often says. The proper good stuff. A few squillion slurpy tentacles might just distract French attentions.

Then? Us Sex Commandos would simply bus our way into Paris, just like any other tourists, here to see the fun and the glamour of the military parades en route to smashing Britain, easy-peasy-Nihon-squeezy.

That was the theory, anyway. I glanced anew at the horizon smoke columns. Turns out hentai ignites wine.

But Paris's parades. My god. They're daunting. We'd never seen anything like them, and we (I?) come from the globe-spanning British Empire. Its trade fleets and navies spanned the globe. My colleagues never tired of informing me that if it wished, the Empire could fill the North Sea, coast-to-coast, with its merchant marine, then send brass bands marching across to tell those Norwegians to stop eating whales buried in the beach for a gazillion years, and enjoy some wholesome home-cooked deep fried Mars bars like Mummy would microwave. Not one musician would wet their feet. The Empire practically invented military parades, pomp and circumstance, and from what I'd witnessed in the previous year-ish, it was bloody amazing at 'em.

But here? Bordeaux line infantry pranced lockstep through Paris's far-too-wide-silly-foreigners boulevards. Juvenile males and/or females, conscripted fresh off the farm, judging by the straw still in their hair and wide-eyed smiles plastered across beaming faces, they jostled in clumsy lines down the avenues, tucking in bog-standard military spandex even as they marched. Steel-grey sperm cannon clattered over the cobbles: some factory-fresh and gleaming with the new hydrazine engines purring like svelte panthers; some decades old, backfiring every few seconds and stained with juice-strata of innumerable ex-enemies. Some four thousand of Louisiana's old-school Quapaw cataphracts clip-clopped alongside 'em. Yeah. Horsies. They snorted and tossed their manes, the riders laughed and jostled one another with the sheer fun of being in their Empire's dark heart, their carbon-steel spermicide wipe-clean armour glinted and flashed in the sun, their horseshoes struck mighty sparks off the cobbles.

But Paris should never have been able to clasp 'em to its corrupt bosom in the first place. So they tell me. The Frogs' latest rise was as inexorable as it was mysterious: until a few years ago, the Royal Navy's blockades segregating the various far-flung bits of France's worldwide empire had remained utterly inviolate. But under Bardot's Imperial stewardship, the French colonies' various Navies had swelled, and strengthened, and now the Royal Navy could no longer completely strangle passage of Louisianan or Malinese Army divisions to aid their European mother ship. These cataphracts' mere presence was proof incarnate of the re-coalescings of France's far-flung amputations. Like Terminator 2. And you'd better believe every Frog knew it. Not just Louisiana and Mali, but Quebec, Siam, Madagascar, Bougainville, Formosa, Te Ika-a-Māui, Alderaan, Madras, um, Khazad-dûm, yeah, oodles of others. Bardot was getting the gang back together. Her assassination couldn't happen soon enough!

And now it was the turn of a gazillion supply trucks to growl and zoom past. Totally new designs. Our commander Sergeant Stefan Csintalan had been insisting he'd never encountered such vehicles in the last war, they whirred and purred in columns twenty vehicles broad, each packed to the gills with enough war kit to drown the Romulan Empire without firing a shot.

Aircraft too. Heavy diesel lorries hauled loathsome exemplars of every aerofoil design you could ever conceive and at least seventy you couldn't. Finally, the crowd favourite

(you could tell because the gawking millions packed twenty deep along the parade routes bisecting the city, they were subtle enough to scream and howl in ecstasy and faint in soggy heaps): the French elite Sexy troops in their millions, marching, gleaming, oiled, nude, in dainty and terrifying battle order.

Towering over all else, however, there existed several cylindrical mechanoid giants. France's propaganda rags called them 'Mort Guns'. Vast bastards. The dang things loomed up from below the horizon like Godzilla's gran'pappy. We'd spotted the behemoths from spy zeppelin snaps and hadn't a clue what they were, and we wanted a closer peek.

And now we did and wished we hadn't. They turned out to be cylindrical monstrosities mounted on steel tracks apparently designed to convey their cargo over savannah, swamp, breasts, abyssal deeps, dense jungle, additional breasts, tundra, suburbia, you name it, with damage to neither terrain nor cargo. And what a cargo! The cylindrical monstrosity in question looked like a cross between that subterranean drill-vehicle-thing transported by Thunderbird 2, and the Planet Killer from Star Trek. Resident Sex Commando geeky-types speculated it might conceivably generate some kind of hideous horizontal electric field tornado.

But for what purpose? Er. Well. The propaganda pamphlets one could yolk in armfuls from chiffon-tuxxed urchins on every street corner screamed that these immense vehicles could coax a million males' souls out through their prostates at a range of up to a thousand kilometres, or two thousand if it's humid or he's female.

The ladies proved a tad less susceptible to its inexorable charms, but not by much. French TV crowed of its effectiveness via footage of them in action against captured ayatollahs.

The pamphlets claimed these things could pulverise London. From Monte Carlo. In silence, we gaped out the bus windows up at the barbaric giga-batons. So did the crowd.

"Cor ..." someone said at last, her voice wobbling a tad. "Who thinks of these things?"

Their shadows eclipsed the Sun.

Oh right. Note note scribble scribble.

"Does ... does anyone at home know France has 'em?" Bridget murmured. "I'd nowt heard o' yon contraptions." She likely intended to break the tension, but somehow only strengthened it. "Aye, I said 'yon', what of ut? Had you, Pauline babe?" she enquired of a neighbour. "You neither? How badly would they maul a coastal redoubt? Or a city?"

"If tonight we perform as we must, we'll never have to find out," our commanding officer Sergeant Stefan called down the length of the bus, a vast burly circus-strongman of a fella, taking time off from his day job as a mountain range. Thus far he'd busied himself way down the bus's other end. "The time has come for the final briefing."

The male twinkle-toes-d his way down the narrow bus aisle like an elephant moonwalking over marshmallows, and pulled an intercom receiver from a wall compartment. “At attention, my Sex Commandos,” he barked happily into it, eyes bright.

Hundreds shot to our feet with a clatter.

“The eyes of our Empire are upon us!” his magnified voice announced. Yes, yes, of course, I reminded myself, swallowing. “Our months of training, our years of experience, of seasoning; they have all led us to this moment. They culminate tonight. Are we not fortunate to walk with destiny so? ‘Course we are. And we will conduct ourselves appropriately. Now you know me. I do not greatly care for external discipline, all that sir yes sir boot-camp shite. But our Empire’s eyes are upon us,” he repeated. The man’s molten-gravel voice burnished further. “It is only five hours, now, to T minus zero, when our attack on Bardot’s pad shall commence. Time to prepare in earnest, kiddos. Fortune shall favour us. Apply war paint.”

War paint! That’s more like it! Like magic, our atmosphere of tense foreboding dissolved into keen professionalism. Dozens of lean, muscled arms threw bus curtains shut, blocking the Mort Guns towering behind the closer multi-storeyed apartment buildings and their darkly delicious promises of erotic rendezvous. Off with threads and on with goop.

The ‘war paint’ referred to by Sergeant Stefan was, as I’m sure those of you who’d enjoyed my previous tales will recall, a crude yet effective means of squelching unwanted throbbing and longing suffered during the course of one's duties delightfully fucking the raunchiest dickheads in Christendom. The whole point of Sexy warfare is that you explode them into delightful snoozy flaccid oblivion and not the other way round, and an extra wee something to shield yourself against their machinations don't go amiss. This stuff in particular took a good few hours to really properly absorb.

Ohh. Joan and I applied the stuff to each other. Everyone on our bus had paired up and squelched the thick clear grease across each other's torsos. It's a bit like KY Jelly, only erotic.

Its application is a fascinating mind-fuck, I love it. The point of the war paint is that if you wear it, the delicate tracery of pheromones and other witchcraft within, don't ask me what, ensures a vast amplification of your attractiveness and erotic tension-building to neighbours, unless they're wearing the same gunk, in which case the two cancel in some sciencey fashion.

Already a druggie subculture had kicked off in London's West End. I surely can't blame the kiddies involved, for if you apply the stuff to a partner and they to you, when you're both half-coated you get these delicious clash-y sensations as the two effects battle. My cock was trying to inflate and shrink at once. If we hadn't been on the most frightening mission of our entire lives thus far I'd have found it hilarious.

I worked my own translucent goop into and around Joan's taut curves. She shifted in her seat to give me better access to her bum. I did the same. With a cheeky grin she again pistoned her hand along my fattening cock.

Electric pleasures jazzed through me. “You minx!” I squawked. She stuck her tongue out at me and grinned. I cupped her vagina, ground my palm into her clit, and thrummed three fingers against her G-spot. Her vaginal musculature squirmed and flexed around my touch. She yelped and moaned, gripped my forearm with her free hand for all she was worth, her twinkly eyes rolled back in her head, and ...

... And the war paint started working its asexual magicks. The stuff seemed to sink into us like ether, vanishing and leaving crisp, chilly efficiency. I found myself fantasising about tax returns and pot plants.

Joan gave me a regretful smile. “Tha’s champion, but ... give us a rain check eh, Chas? Warfare first, clunge-plunging later.”

Clunge-plunging!⁹ Dear God, the visuals. But all good sense. I grinned, nodded back, gave her a peck on her forehead and a cheeky squeeze unto her deep-spot, and withdrew.

As our tour buses drove through the city, another batch of a few hundred French Sexy troops trundled past on one of their own trucks. They flaunted at the crowd with a full-on spermy broadside and carved out a massive spunking valley through swooning, rosy-faced civilians. Lo and behold I felt nothing instinctual, only tactical contemplation, holy crap this stuff worked well. I began to feel as though we'd smack Bardot's elite bodyguards for six, overzealous fool that I was, for as you'll soon see—ah, but I've already said too much! More later.

⁹ “Clunge-plunging” is too a legitimate Northerner phrase. See? 50ftcl.it/clunge

“Splendid,” tectonic'd Stefan. “Civvies back on, ladies and/or male ladies.”

Right. On threads slid.

Chapter Three: Bends All Penis To Her Will

Righty-ho chaps sooo there's only so much info that 1970s-foetus-me felt he was in a position to coax from his then-colleagues. See, the subsequent decades have imparted enough psychological distance for me to readily concede, today, that I'd not then had a friggin' clue just why the Sex Commandos considered Imperatrix Bardot's kidnap so imperative. I mean I'd already privately conceded my cluelessness back on the bus. But I'd also figured that if I'd publicly broadcast as much, then the others might look down on me and scorn me and shun me. Hah.

So we've got an intel gap. Let's fill it. This next bit is primarily for you other fetuses, just so's we're (1) all up to speed on what's actually going down with France and why we deemed it necessary to knock its leader's block off, and (2) to reassure all fetus-readers that your neighbouring fetus-emeritusses (2a) do in fact know you're clueless and you ain't hiding shit, BUT (2b) really, really don't look down on you about that or about any of life's stressors (or if they do they're idiots and should bloody stop), for (2c) the reason your elders can see through you is because they once were you. It's empathy in its purest and most objective form. All folk are born clueless (except possibly Stefan) and there's nowt wrong with that, and in fact your elders will be delighted if you have the guts to ask ‘em for assistance and listen and learn and wise-up and blossom and become even more rad. The sole scornable offence here is attempting to remain clueless.

That said, I ain’t your mum (as far as I know, hawt-stuff winkwink). No skin off my nose if cluelessness is your kinda thang. Please yourself. If you genuinely couldn’t give a shit about wising-up and just want to advance the story, skip ahead to the bit where Joan starts talking about the Bible Belt.

Still here? Proud of ya. You’re my cup of tea, you know that? Right, enough time wasted. Sixty years earlier, in 1914, France’s then-boss Horndog-General Joseph Joffre smashed the European peace of fifty years and piledrove both Spain and Italy. Doing any kind of justice to exactly why would be way beyond the scope of this story, so suffice it to say he’s just a dick. Whilst the male’s monstrous million-maiden conscript armies found themselves bogged down in their foreign conquests to the south, Prussia chose that moment to avenge her losses in the Franco-Prussian War of 1870, stabbed La France in the back, and invaded.

A panicked Paris resurrected an ancient order of battle-nuns calling itself, of all things, ‘Charlemagne’s Praetorian Prostitutes’. Do remember that name, they’ll reappear later.

Three million conscripted courtesans and two weeks later, Prussia’s armies staggered reeling. The fuming Praetorian Prostitutes struck anew and cascaded over the Rhine in many shambling deluges of seismic rumpy pumpy. Prussia’s military had configured itself for all attack and no defence. To everyone's astonishment, including them, the ragged hordes of Praetorian Prostitutes overran Europe's Germanic bits inside a month.

Europe soon shat unrelenting bricks. Britain, Kalmar¹⁰ and Russia leaped into the fray to prevent Joffre turning Europe into his own personal harem-stable. Several years of horrid carnage later, in 1918, down France went.

Round One went to the Allies, at agonising cost, in what history would call the first Vaginal Apocalypse. Prussia specifically wobbled back to its shaky feet and decided aw hell no, never again, so it constructed the grandest set of fortifications in galactic history, the Siegfried Line. Down the entire east bank of the Rhine, Switzerland to North Sea, and then behind that, a series of ginormous sexy artillery super-guns, trained at the dark heart of Paris, collectively nicknamed the Bukkake Blitzkrieg. Remember those?

But France yet hungered for hegemony and conquest. Italy and the other tropical Empires expended oodles of browsweating aeons terraforming the world's deserts into glorious mosaics of inland seas, beachfront property, sunbathing hotspots and nightclubs. Prime climate for a spot o' rampant humping. The Frogs longed to undulate likewise, and to reclaim anew their place in the Imperial Sun. But! The other Powers had already nicked the world's choicest sun-drenched sands; would illustrious La France make do with their leavings?

Like hell, buster. France's latest boss Charles de Gaulle therefore blathered a zillion snooty speeches about the gnarliness of saunas, ally-of-convenienced the entirety of the Balkans (to sidestep Siegfried), then in 1941, he decreed the invasion of the icy tundras of Russia, Siberia and thence Bootyliciousgrad, (led by an certain illustrious Jurassic gent we'll bump into later, as I'm sure you can guess from chapter 15's title, but one thing at a time).

France-plus-Allies' combined Sexy-strength made our subsequent Frog-stomping that much tougher. Sexy warfare was a staunch European tradition since Napoleon, but Britain's clumsy conscript armies just didn't snuff the mustard no more. We needed fresh tactics and unorthodox thought.

Enter Stefan Csintalan's Royal Marines Sex Commandos. For the first time, Britain had its own specialist Sexy infantry, elite as drat and spoiling for a glorious, glistening fuck. I actually spent my teens despising them and European Sexy special-forces more generally, if you can believe that, as the Sex Commandos had a slightly-too-cavalier attitude to using my hometown Jackson and the wider Belt as their own personal hyper-advanced training grounds, but that malarkey, and the events subsequently winning to them my heart and my allegiance, are tales for another day.

God, it's fun. We operated and yet operate behind enemy lines, featuring dashing and romantic penis-fencings upon moonlit rooftops, ambushes steamy with passion and phwoar, brutal interrogations with pitiless orgasm forcings and edgings, cheeky roses placed on beloved adversaries' pillows, entirely new perfume variants, original recipes for exquisite chocolates, devastating and soul-searing poetry, incandescent romancing, volcanic rumpy-pumpy, the stakes were never higher, the dangers never darker, we faced the excitement, the thrill and the danger of erotic jousting every damn day and thirsted for more. You know, the usual romantic mush.

The war entire didn't really hit catharsis and closure as such, it just petered out. Frankly, all sides were beyond exhausted, beyond shattered. Don't judge us, reader, I'd like to see your condition if you had to battle-orgasm every half hour for six years. You'd spunk crypt dust. In my 1973 Hell Week training I discovered that the hard way.

Although us anti-French technically won the thing, as a war-weary Empire, we simply had not the strength to fully pin France down. Round Two, the second Vaginal Apocalypse concluded in 1947 a Pyrrhic stalemate.

And that brings us to Brigitte Bardot.

No-one had ever felt anything like her.

Every individual has their own unique personal energies, their own vibe. Combine two vibes? Fireworks, baby.

Perplexed? Like me to expound?

Consider Gavin, your gorgeous hunk-next-door. He radiates vivid sensations of dreamy artistry. He loves flower-arranging, marathons, soaps, violins, moustaches, devops, salsa, trains, bears, standup and woodworking. You can feel in a twinkling that if he wooed you, teased you, pursued you, you'd go wobbly at the knees and follow him around like a love-struck kitten, and he'd wax turgid with dominant nurture. That's Gavin's vibe.

Now consider your snazzy mate Tracy. She loves wind-chimes, crystal-healsies, yoga, tantra, panzers, vegan-keto, infrared wine, astrophysics, standup comedy, soap operas, wrist bangles, salsa dancing and stargazing. Picture someone who enjoys all these things. Incredibly specific, right? That's Tracy's vibe.

Tracy may too thirst after Gavin's same creative gloriousness. But whilst mid-thirst, her own artistries might flourish, she'd match his devastating teasing comeback for comeback, their lust-earthquakes would be far more level, and who knows, she might even out-Domme him.

Their vibes battle, they fuse, they incandesce, together they are powerful. Vibes, baby.

We Sex Commandos map our targets' minds hourly. We master their desires. Lick their minds just right, and they're gooey and helpless for you, and they adore it, and at our sight and touch they go wobbly with anticipation and pleasure, mwa ha ha.

You gotta understand this. You gotta master it. Stefan runs us through case studies every day. We pick a statesperson or celebrity at random, map out their lusts and longings from only a few short video minutes; and then, if we're in the neighbourhood, we might leapfrog through their bedroom windows and put our predictions to the test. Field-work this advanced is not for beginners, needless to say. But take it from me, there's no feeling quite like holding the Sex-Commando-wide record for the fewest seconds between "eat lead hoodie" and "sir may your slut cum?"

Each person's emotional map has its strengths and weaknesses, even us sexy super-soldiers. When you become skilled enough at reading people, you can flick a single glance and you just know how you'd make their bodies, minds, hearts and souls glow with glossy pleasure.

But not Bardot.

Us Sex Commandos could squiggle through every Mind we'd ever met. Every Mind but hers.

We'd stockpiled ginormous rolodexes of her media appearances. We'd pored over every frame of TV footage we could find, every propaganda video, every poster, and before her entry into politics, every movie, every interview, every fashion photo. Not until as early as her mid-teens could we detect a single nano-expression flitting across that ethereal face not present by conscious, deliberate will.

Beyond her mid-teens, Bardot commanded not only perfect mastery over every single emotion, sensation and vibe she chose to radiate, but also legendary skill in making them appear 200 percent effortlessly natural.

And boy oh boy did she radiate them. Our Gavin, being your standard male (if you'll pardon the sexism) is only dimly aware he induces different sensations in different people simply via being his standard self. But Bardot could apparently calibrate within her target any emotional state she desired. That state was not exclusively but usually holy crap Bardot is light-years out of my league, worship her worship her, follow her commands precisely and if I'm a very good boy indeed she'll let me smooch her adorable wee toesies. No, seriously. A Bletchley Park decrypt of French comms traffic once contained that exact text, italics theirs.

Seriously m'deude, pick a random Bardot media case study: vibe matronly matriarch, nurturer and protector. Pick a second: vibe insatiable sex-panther, bends all penis to her Will. A third: vibe cerebral megamind, trounce Mensa morons. A fourth: vibe mythic heroine, intrepid Marianne supreme.

What a chameleon! One minute she'd train baying crowds to nibble treats out of her hand, next minute she'd slay political opponents dead, and next minute still, charm galactic grouches like good ol' de Gaulle.

Ever heard of the Great Man theory¹¹? Bardot was its personification.

Not only did the gal seem electric with effervescent beauty, she knew exactly how to harness it. She whipped the exhausted Frogs back up into mad paroxysms of vigour.

And no-one could put their finger on how. Wannabe dictatrices are a dime a dozen, as any Thomas the Tank Engine fan knows full well. But for some infernal dang reason, France's populace paid Bardot all the attention in the world.

In just a few short years, from the late 1960s onwards, back came the tungsten-chrome jackboots, back came the disco-thumpin' rallies, back came the penisey propagandas, back came the nationalism and the triumphalism and the phunky-phresh up-vibes. France reverted to global ground zero as the Place To Be for any person in the entire world wishing to increase their sexual skills from Good, to Great, to Holy Fuck Aren't I Just The Erotic-est?

The still-exhausted victors of the second Vaginal Apocalypse hurled dark threats, then peace-keeping armies, to hold Bardot's dank menace at bay. But ... the threats never seemed to carry any weight. The energy and fizz of the occupying armies always somehow dissolved into the cloying debauchery of their Froggy surroundings, like Berocca in Baileys. At whichever country Bardot turned her eyelash-fluttering gaze upon, the civilian populace kicked off foaming with pro-Frog revolution and danger. We'd thought we knew a thing or two about French propaganda, but holy friggin' moly, if at that point we'd had even the faintest clue about the full horrors of Bardot's scheming, we'd have trembled and broke and scurried back home like freaky weasels.

In a twinkling, Bardot's armies stallioned across Europe and lapped at Britain's doorstep. Our war strategists insisted that our brave lads and/or gals shall indeed pulverise the imminent Froggy tsunamis in their millions ... but ... if Bardot was willing to eat those losses, and judging by these galaxy-spanning Parisian parades, by golly she'll commit to that without blinking, then all forecasts said that within three excruciating months, Britain would be her unwilling lapdog.

Chapter Four: Drill, Baby, Drill

“Yeah, but what abou’ that Bible Belt place?” asked Joan. Welcome back, fetuses! “Aren’t they gonna join our war too? We spent weeks there stirrin’ up anti-French feeling. Crazy place.” Ugh. You’d be a bit crazy too, I found myself thinking, if exotic European lunatics like us Sex Commandos had been prodding decent Jackson folk so, but held my tongue. “Each city with its own Pope!” my lady-mate continued. “An’ your hometown Jackson’s Pope was your first-ever girlfriend, whatshername ...?”

“—Mary Jones!” I said. “Remember her? She was the one whose official robes of state included that rucksack keg of communion moonshine and twelve sawn-off grapeshot launchers.”

My lady-mate frowned. “Well yeah, not sayin’ her kit ain’t skux deluxe bro, but I thot every Belter Pope wore ‘em.”

“You don’t remember?¹² Dammit, Joan, it was you and Dave who talked me into wooing her back in the first place!”

“You date so many lunatics. I get ‘em mixed up.” Joan wrinkled her nose and scratched it, then brightened. “Ah! Wasn’ she leadin’ that humongous North American battle we did back in January? The one screamin’ ‘you’ll never take me alive you Cajun assholes’?”

“That’s her!” I spluttered.

¹² You’d be amazed how often Joan reminds me of 50ftcl.it/dougal.

“Well I couldn’ get a word in edgeways. She’s a grouch.”

“Well don’t go down on her when eight thousand New Orleans legionnaires are attacking her bunker! Properly good surprise-oral invigorates Sexy soldiery like us only ‘cause we train to adore it. It annoys everyone else.”

“Is tha’ so?” Joan frowned and pouted. “Did I misunderstand th’ typical Papist claptrap about speakin’ in tongues?” Pause. “Bad idea to holler ‘you go girl’ up her nonny each time she fired a headshot?”

I stifled a laugh. “There might be a certain ecumenical miscommunication there, yes.”

“Well she doesn’ sound like your type at all. Most o’ your old flames tell me they adore that.” She paused. She pondered. “Apart from tha’ Tuareg valkyrie we bumped into at that Derek-an’-Clive¹³ Hogmanay after-party. Such a grouch. But yeah, you sure that was Pope Mary?”

“Yes, Joan, I can guarantee that was her. Or Magdeline V, that’s her Papal name.”

“The Fifth? You tol’ me a ways back your hometown Jackson only had three lady-Popes.”

“N ... her V in particular means ‘vagina’: she enjoys annoying the city’s reactionaries.”

“Oh? That’s actually not bad. I like her style.”

¹³ That pair are a hoot. Here’s a sample of their comedic output (and if I can provide a naughty-words warning for nothing else in life, I’ll provide it for this, consider yourself warned): 50ftcl.it/this-bloke

“... Yyyeah, so did she. Bit too much. On my first return to Jackson back in January, I caught her instructing the entire city to address her as, quote, ‘The Domina, the Pontifatrix, the Cajun-Crusher’.”

Joan snickered. “Ha, really? Love it! Maybe she ain’t so horrid then. She was the one who charmed the whole Belt into allyin’ with us agains’ France, yeah? They’re sendin’ their Prussian cannon-lorry-things to help us? Lahnd-kroyt-zirs or summat?”

“Landkreuzers, yes. Though the Belters call theirs ‘tanks’. Some kind of code name apparently. They’ll put us out of a job! How can you charm a crew behind a foot of steel?”

“You managed it when one kidnapped your Mary. Got your blood so boilin’ you slashed your red-hot BattleCock through its steel plate like a Star Wars lightsabre! Never seen anythin’ like it!”

Argh. “I wish the others would stop viewing me humping that thousand-tonne landkreuzer to death like it was one big novelty,” I mumbled. “It boiled my blood because they’d stolen my girl, it was awful.”

Joan laughed, oblivious, geez. “You discovered a way for Sex Commandos to beat landkreuzers! We should dangle Mary from a zeppelin over our enemies, like, an’ you cud pound ‘em to bits rescuing her. We’d thrash France in a week.”

I grimaced and gripped my seat rest. “Um ... Joan! I, I, them stealing her killed me inside ...!”

Joan’s chuckle perished. “—Oh. Oh! Sorry, pet! Have I crossed the line again?”

She looked stricken. “Not again! How can I make it up to you? Another hand job?”

“Y ... not with our war paint on. One rain cheque for another.” I attempted a grin and changed the subject. “But I do take your point from before,” I added. “Enough Belter landkreuzers will thrash this lot,” I fired a frisky nod out the window, at still more of the endless, endless military parades.

Joan laughed, brightening. “Champion.”

Was it just my imagination, or was that military brass band over there belting out It’s Raining Men?

Slurp-slurp noises behind us ceased. “Oh man. I ain’t so sure.”

Joan and I turned to face our mutual mate Dave in the row behind. Thus far our colleague been sucking his own cock and jotting thorough technical notes concerning climactic functionality of both glans and lips. I toyed with asking Dave if I could attach copies for my hometown folks’ further reading delectations, then considered asking Mike if he’d like front-row seats for my folks’ cranial detonations also.

“I ’ate to speak ill,” Dave pointed out, “of some of Christendom’s few geezers able to hold up their end of an ecumenical natter for more than five minutes, but ...” He trailed off and blinked thoughtfully to himself and stared out the window.

“Do you always view the world through Jesus-tinted glasses?” I asked him, unsure of appropriate sarcasm levels but deciding on Affable.

“—Not while we’re on mission, pet,” Joan hissed in my ear, and patted my hand. “Come on. You know how his beliefs aid him.” I nodded tightly and returned her hand-pat.

He hadn’t noticed. Classic Dave. He blinked again. His face creased up in a colossal grin and he chuckled and returned to serenity and met our gazes.

“... Yes?” Joan and I said together.

“... But ... like,” he continued, “the other day, right, I got chatting with one of their engineer-bishops, right, and ... and she confided in me the Belters can’t freight their landkreuzer fings, right, across the Atlantic anything like double-lively enuf. Projections say they’ll delay the Fall by like, like only a fortnight—”

“—We can sidestep such absurdities by doing our jobs,” subwoofered a voice three inches behind my left ear. I suppressed a yelp.

“Apologies,” tectonic’d Stefan. The windows rattled. “I’d promised you I’d cease that. Old habits die hard, yes?”

Our commanding NCO was a force of goddamn nature. No other way of putting it. Stefan craned his neck to avoid puncturing the bus ceiling. Stern authority and endearing keenness shone from his face in equal measure, like Stalin out-cuddly-ing the entire cast of RuPaul's Drag Race. "Have you each absorbed your specific briefs?" he enquired.

"I've been leafing through this shit since Venice," I said. I brandished a sheaf of papers from the rear pocket of the bus seat before me. French counterespionage was formidable but imperfect, we weren't totally ignorant of their ways. Brush up yo.

"We all have," said Dave and Joan together, flapping theirs.

"I must know the Élysée Palace interior better than its designers," I said.

"I'm seein' the poxy thing in me dreams," Joan groaned.

"Glad to hear it." Stefan grinned. "Private Dave: how far between our target's main exterior gates and the internal palace doors?"

"Fifty-one metres, sarge," Dave parroted, glaring at Stefan with a grudging smile-vibe sparkling away at the corners of his eyes.

"How many seconds separate the patrols there between 0300 and 0400?"

"One hundred and eight I fink."

"Such a patrol's standard personnel?"

"Er four Praetorian Prostitutes; er three Sadist-Empaths; and ... and six point eight Algerian Lotharios."

"How might you overpower, for instance, the three Sadist-Empaths?"

Dave flashed a cheeky grin. "A mere three, sarge?"

“Let us say five.”

The grin broadened. “Bruv. That’s more like it.”

“Eight.”

The grin plateaued. “Too numerous to simply trounce head-on, eh? Then I shall mask me emotions. Give the blind tossers zero grist.” Dave sped up as he warmed to his task. “Cheeky Ritalin nasal-spritzes, vanish off their emotive R.D.F., bish bosh, job done. Only suppresses emotions for a few seconds, but seconds is all I’ll need. By then I’ll have anal-chained ‘em, trussed up nice. Eight, you say? Make the chain a ring, why not, eh?”

“Describe.”

“Describe.”

Dave looked a tad uncertain at that, then rallied. “The Ritalin means I’m already off their psionic map, yeah? We all know how bleedin’ dim Frog empaths are. If they achieve a psychic lock-on they’re formidable enough, but spooge on a tailor’s dummy an’ they’ll fink it’s you.”

“Describe—”

“Keep your hair on, guv!” he squealed. “I’m gettin’ t’ that.”

Stefan chuckled. “Continue.”

“Ta muchly. So, like: proper placement of false positives. An extra-chunky wank-bank withdrawal to get meself proper randy; get me own precum¹⁴ throbbin' with luvverly pheromones; dab some around each Empath's arse to give the next geezer somethin' to home in on; an' they'll collapse into a ring all by 'emselves. Each will forever fuck the next and think it's me!"

Stefan exuded a gravelly guffaw. "Your unique tactics never cease to fascinate me, Private Dave. I would hate to be your enemy."

"Remember the last time we tried that on Empath P.O.W.s?" Dave continued. "They rogered for weeks! We had to pull 'em apart with tugboats! Did we bring any for this training mission? I wouldn't want even more deaths on me conscience."

"Nor mine. May prove most amusing, however inappropriate. I sense fortune will favour you tonight. Private Joan, identify the fourth most significant encumbrance between the Palace grounds' front gates and the structure proper's main doors, and how to vanquish it."

Joan froze in concentration. "Fourth ... er, the spunk gatling-emplacements a' the ground floor windows either side of the doors, like. The spunk is from a Kentucky-style fried chicken diet, well-noxious: spunk from a KFC diet reeks like sulphur. Depending on where the chickens are sourced, you can counter it with, er ...” Her brow furrowed.

¹⁴ I've received astonishing comments from various ladies saying, "Precum?! Ooh you scholar!" After picking myself up off the floor, I discovered that there's a Latin word 'precum', which means 'petition', or even 'prayer'. I also discovered that many of my lady-friends genuinely don't know about good old British precum. I would pair my calls of "go down on your woman regularly, lads, for she deserves to feel incredible" with "go down on your man regularly, ladies, and you might learn a thing or two about precum."

“Known poultry intel was in your notes too, Private.”

“Aye, I know.” She frowned up at him, deep in thought. “New Orleans. Dominiques. Bred ‘specially for their war effort.”

Stefan gazed intently at her, giving no hint of Joan’s correctness or otherwise. “Do continue.”

Joan bit her lip but held her gaze. “Then ... using war-bred Louisiana Dominiques, in Kentucky-style recipes, produces fried chicken which, if I remember our hen-permutation seminars, gives its consumer spunk not just smellin’ like brimstone, but viscous like tar. They’re like rubber marbles.”

“And?”

“An’ ... the males garrisoned in the gatling-bunkers can ejaculate them at ... sixty metres a second.”

“And?”

“An’ ... if you’ve practiced like we have, you can simply swat them with table tennis bats. Champion.” Joan pulled a bat from a seat pocket and waved it. “Righ’ between the eyes.”

“Spot on, Private! Well done.” Stefan’s eyes gleamed as he grinned. “I suspect fortune will smile on you also.” Joan smiled up at him and flushed with pleasure.

“Private Charlie,” he said. My turn. My heart rate kicked up ten beats. “You’re clearing the Palace room by room,” continued our commanding officer, grey eyes twinkly, enjoying himself hugely, cheeky bastard. “You kick in a random boudoir door, apparently womanned by swooning civilians, but only when you attempt to ease their distress with a delightful areola massage do they reveal themselves as members of Bardot’s Own Imperial Guard. They are already unleashing upon you a Level Six psychic ambush.”

“Level Six? Blimey,” said Dave, whistling. “Give the geezer a fightin’ chance.”

“I’d be remiss in my duties if I’d not already trained you to shrug off greater torments, sunshine. Forgotten so soon my training exercise last year involving every Sex Commandos’ most vivid teenage crush hurling specific abuse at them, all at once, yes?”

“I won’t forget that in a hurry,” I agreed, wincing. Dave nodded frowning also. “How on earth did you round up every first crush of every Sex Commando?”

“Trade secret,” said Stefan, with a rangy grin. “But you stall. Continue.”

Right. “So ... Level Six ... that’s where the psychics in question target whatever formative experiences you’d had at age four or below. The murkiest building blocks of one’s psyche ...?”

Stefan held my gaze, not speaking or giving anything away.

“Let’s see ...” I drummed my fingers on the seat-rest before me. “I don’t know a thing about these specific psychics, so I must keep my own counterattacks broad. Their Six-or-above psychological attacks often involve appropriated and corrupted memories of family members, so that's standard flirting ruled out." I drummed my fingers a bit more, lost in thought. "In that case, back to basics." I raised my arms and wagged my fingers. My forearm arteries undulated as they surfed the flexing muscle below. "Good-old-fashioned hand jobs. Make them orgasm until they swoon," I concluded. Joan chuckled.

"Old-school," agreed Stefan. "I like it. In that case: how many single-fist pumps might one require to bring a male Guard Lance-Corporal, five years' experience, to ejaculation?"

"Standard handjob protocol?"

"Indeed." Stefan stopped, then grinned again. "... No. In your counter-psychic exertions you'd broken the middle finger on your left hand, proximal phalange, clean fracture. How many pumps?"

Thorough bastard. I wagged my left fingers, contemplative-like. "All right, mean of forty-five pumps, standard deviation ... three point, um ..."

"—Fifty-three, son, step up, we need you sharp as a pin for the big job tonight."

Oh I wasn't having that. I placed my left hand over the bus seat-rest in front of me, ever so casual, then gripped. Some of my savvier musculature biosubsystems kicked up their outputs a few notches. The sturdy metal tube buckled. "I know my own strength. It's forty-five."

Stefan gazed at it for a few seconds, impassive. "Your finger remains unconscionably unsnapped. Demo inconclusive."

Hm-hm! Stakes raised! For two hundred and sixty one milliseconds I pondered thusly: could the genetic bio-upgrades possessed by most Sex Commandos, moi included, return a broken finger to battle-readiness before tonight's showtime?

Yes they could. And Stefan knew this. Stefan was surely testing me. You're on, suckah.

We'd already accreted an audience. Colleagues turned in their seats. Still holding his gaze, I held both hands before me, fingers splayed, grasped my left hand's middle finger with my right ...

... And snapped the relevant bone. Gasps aplenty.

It hurt exactly as much as you might think.

"Bloody hell, Chas," said Joan, "what are you playing at?"

I winked at her, and—

For a split-second Stefan froze, then he relaxed and laughed. "That is not the proximal phalange!" he said. "Now break the correct bone."

What? Reeling, I desperately reviewed my mental knowledge of human anatomy, I could have sworn—

"Just my joke," he said, flashing his trademark cliff-face grin. My brothers and sisters hooted with laughter. "Don't give me that glare, Private. This was your grotesque¹⁵ choice, not mine.”

I restrained myself from strangling the man. Right. Right. With my injured hand, I—

“And you’ve mixed up left and right,” he added. Still more laughter, and this time he joined in. “Ha! Ha! I couldn’t resist that little jape. My apologies. Do continue.”

I sighed and mock-glared at him. Okay. Where was I? Right! With my injured hand, I squeezed a second divot out of the seat rest metal, identical to the first beside it.

I almost concealed the pain, too. Head swimming, I stared right through our commander. “45 pumps, sir.”

Stefan gazed at my hand, then the two identical metallic hand-print divots, then back at me.

“I am not a sir, I am a sergeant,” he said at last. “You know that.” Then he laughed again. “But 45 it is! Well done, lad.”

Yay! My audience gave a round of applause. “Much obliged,” I replied.

The fellow nodded, then swung briskly down the aisle and away. The onlookers returned to chatting amongst themselves. “Lance-Corporal Sally,” his voice drifted over the buzz of conversation, “a puzzler best suited to your particular talents: describe your favoured strategy to get under the emotional skin of, let us say, a thrice-married Parisian Paladin in the process of receiving her fifth child-support court summons ... my word ... indeed? ... I feel for whoever receives that ...”

¹⁵ Love the word ‘grotesque’. Doesn’t get enough air time.

Stefan tap-danced his way down the bus centre aisle, belting out questions tough and demanding. Sex Commandos visibly inflated in his wake. He injected cool determination into the bus’s collective mood. Somehow he could juggle dozens of fiddly mental states without effort. It made me envious, in its best sense.

I could sense eyes on me. “Are you insane?” said Joan and Dave together, though I could see both colleagues’ eyes a-twinkle again.

“Mate,” said Dave, shaking his head. “Y’ astonish me sometimes, y’ really do. I’d not realised ya’d done your homework on Stefan’s personal history.” Joan nodded confirmation.

“What homework?” I asked. “What do you mean?”

“Yeah when he was in the Austro-Hungarian Underground.”

I stared at Dave. “You’ve heard of the Austro-Hungarian Empire? I’m amazed.”

“It was an empire?” Dave scratched his forehead and grinned again. “I thought it was a Catholic summer camp or something.”

Joan snickered and nudged him.

“I’m still in the dark here, fella,” I said. What about this Stefan homework?”

Joan and Dave both stared. “You ... really don’t know?” said Dave. “Blimey! You mean you broke your own finger just for the hell of it?”

“I broke it to show Stefan I meant business. Wouldn’t you? What history?”

Dave shook his head at me. “No-one knows the full story,” he said eventually, “but word is, ’s somethin’ like, when France invaded Romanov Orthodox Siberia back in the ‘40s, right, like half the French Army flooded East through. Every gang in Europe flocked there to mooch off its supply lines, including Stefan, who back then would of been about our age. The foreign arrivals really fucked off the Austrian locals. ‘Specially Hungarians. You know how Austrians can be utter prima donnas. The only way they’d ally with Hungarians like Stefan was if the outsiders could prove their toughness. With wanking contests. Not only did Stefan get ‘imself off seven times in two minutes, but he bullseyed his cumshots against the city hall’s bog-standard Maria Theresa glamour shots, six storeys up, every time.”

“Any of us could do that,” I scoffed. “What’s the big deal?”

Dave gave me a knowing eyebrow-raise. “I ain’t got to the best bit,” he said. “First, he broke two of his own fingers in front of the whole crowd, to show not only was he a proper hard bastard in general, but also he could trounce his competition under self-imposed stunt conditions.”

“Wow. And our modern bio-upgrades hadn’t been invented, had they?” I asked, still cradling my stricken hand. Sparkly-feels crackled off it as the aforementioned bio-upgrades rolled up their figurative shirtsleeves and spat on their hands to prep for the vigorous healsies ahead.

“Nah they most certainly ain’t’n’t.”

“Ain’t’n’t?”

“Yeah ain’t’n’t.” My mate’s grin widened and his eyes twinkled. Joan snerked. “So yeah, worked a treat,” he continued. “Stefan won over two thousand of the most succulent scum in Europe.”

I winced. “Oh god. And you reckon my stunt reminded him of that.”

“Well duh. But I forget who I’m talkin’ to.” He laughed and shook his head.

“It just felt right!” I exclaimed. “Aah. Now it feels unclean somehow. Now Stefan thinks I’m more capable than I actually am.”

“I wouldn’t worry too much mate, ain’t no biggie,” he pointed out, quite reasonably, and as we’d all discover two and a half days later, quite incorrectly too. “We all know you can suck a cock with the best of ‘emohhyoulunatic,” he added, as it occurred to me it might be a hoot to immediately prove his point so I therefore brought him to faceplantey orgasm (after first tapdance-tonguing my personal deactivation codes into Dave’s war paint, naturally). You’ll recall he’d already been sucking his own cock for R&D purposes, so it was but the work of the moment to take the hint.

Joan snerked again and whacked me on my shoulder.
“You’re a straight up nutjob, Chas, you know that?”

Mouth entirely too full for a comeback, I thus jabbed her in the ribs on mutual-smug lady-mate autopilot. Further down the bus, Stefan continued belting out tactical quizzing at other colleagues: “Staff Sergeant Donovan, suppose Bardot kidnapped the only sentient Viagra in São Paulo ...”

Chapter Five: A Pantheon Of Popsy

Our convoy finally popped off the vast avenue, corkscrewing through relatively narrower bits of urban Paris, this street a mere thirty metres across and not part of the parade proper, but still throbbed with martial zeal. We slowed as we drove past one particularly vast city square, swarming with tens of thousands of civilians from all over France's Empire. Many military recruitment kiosks¹⁶ thronged one side. Each sported a scarlet-throated tub-thumper bawling standard join-up-see-the-world spiel. Vast banners blathered variations on Fort Gorgeous London Express: Last One There's A Paedo. More grist for the letters-to-folks! Out came the pencils and paper. The tub-thumpers evidently did a roaring trade, for their recruitment lines spaghetti'd across half the square.

Gridlock. The bus trundled to yet another halt. A nearer queue octopus arm strangled the civic square only a few metres away.

I couldn't help but notice a certain radiant popsy¹⁷ in

¹⁶ I've always found 'kiosk' such a bizarre word. I'm in illustrious company, too. 50ftcl.it/kiosk their midst.

¹⁷ I keep getting reader comments along the lines of: "dude what the hell does popsy mean? I thought that was a brand of ice cream?" It is yet another example of the glorious nuttiness of UK slang, and like many other phrases, it means a beautiful woman. I personally have always pictured 'popsy' as a woman of slightly below average height, petite, and somewhat plump without being overweight. Buxom but not voluptuous. Yeah I'm overthinking this, but when it's on the topic of female beauty, overthinking is a pleasure indeed.

Significant bits of my trainings started shouting their professional heads off about this apparently benign individual contradicting everything I'd ever been taught about France and its myriad martial cultures. Eh? Her apparently exquisitely gorgeous neighbours nonetheless faded ever greyer and drabber around her. Eh? x2. For the life of me I could not figure out why, for these neighbours were Paris's bog-standard sublime stunners. All this gal did was snicker and goss amongst them ... sporting subtly lovely freckles atop a giggle-scrunched wee nose, yum ... amid a breeze-swept tousle of shoulder-length bloneness. Mmm! Enchanting, endearing, nothing I'd not enjoyed a thousand times, yet the incongruity-vibe persisted ...

... And aha, epiphany. In Blighty, in Dixie, her vibe may be common as sausages, but amid the Galadriel fashionistas of gay Paree she seemed as rare as a Casanovan condom. She lacked their haughty sneers; instead she glowed with a how-de-do folksy grin. She seemed a damn hard gal to dislike.

Damn peculiar citizenry exception! Every French civilian I'd yet beheld seemed to throb with the shared expectation of wooing and seduction and love, but, like, a distant, ethereal love, like glacial starlight. But this gal? You could actually like her, and share horrible jokes, and warm to her as a person and her to you. These others' snootiness implied expectations of, say, receiving a dozen exquisite red roses each sunrise. She, however, would also happily futz and pootle about in the garden and grow the damn things alongside you, with much squelching in Wellingtons and mud and pongy horse poo and composting and soil beneath her fingernails and a cheeky pint when the day's toil is complete.

All that in just a glance. Wow. Vibes, eh? Odd! Her presence seemed to up-end everything I thought I knew about France and its citizenry. I'd have marked her down as a foreigner if her France-vibe didn't equal or exceed that of her neighbours. A delightful anomaly! Deserves much scrutiny. At first I decided she'd make fab intel fodder and I'd better inspect her with thoroughness, but eventually reasoned fuckit and spent the next few years in blissful gaze-mode.

After many aeons I noticed additional non-queuer neighbours. Reporters galore. Photographers with flash-bulbs snapped snaps. The girl brandished something fist-sized and sparkly, too wee and distant to spy what. But she seemed damn proud of whatever-it-was. And to my surprise, many spangly-uniformed soldiers, not civilians like for the first queue, but actual military personnel, they formed a second queue orthonormal to the first, to get shot with the girl too, and shake her hand, or even smooch it. What gives?

The girl yummed up their attentions. A quartet of squeamishly senior Army officers actually knelt and serenaded her, with guitar and violin and roses and probably-scented calligraphic poetries. Going by the rapture on her wee face, she was lapping that shit up.

A sneering colossus behind the kneeling quartet lost patience and barged right through, shoving them to the cobbles. They roared generic affront in a way suggesting no-one had contradicted any of them about anything at all for over a century. The vast trespasser snatched up the startled girl's wrist. With glinting, villainous eyes never leaving hers, he planted upon her hand the most delicate smooch you ever did see. The quartet managed to angle their heads high enough to lay eyes on their assailant.

And recognise him. As one they wilted.

"What's goin' on there?" said Joan, also staring with furious and enthusiastic concentration at the unfolding scenes, scribbling copious notes. "Mus' jot this down."

The girl said something to the quartet with a hint of teasing smirk. She gestured up at the giant. They ceased their wilting and bounded back up, now all vicious vigour. To my astonishment the elderly officers physically attacked their hulking challenger, like Teletubbies fingerblasting Megatron. The girl stared at the brawl for a few seconds, smirk fading, apparently as surprised as me. Reporter flash-bulbs strobed around her. She forced a smile at the surrounding press, then gazed at her fingernails and looked distinctly peeved.

Our bus vroomed back into clunky life. It performed a series of pimpmobileworthy bunny-hops, we cascaded from our seats into huge aisle piles, the bus resumed movement, we clambered back to our seats ... and apparently by random chance, the girl stared right back at me.

Our eyes met. Dear lord, the warmth basking off her squiggled right through my hindbrain. My chest squirmed, and must have shown on my face too, because the girl's strop vanished in a heartbeat. Her eyes dipped and she broke into a dazzling smile.

A billion dreamy buttercups. My towers o' intellect went all squiffy.

But I'm a friggin' Sex Commando baby, I wasn't taking that nonsense lying down. I flashed at my radiant adversary some tactical swagger every bit the equal of the corker I'd used to charm the chocolate chastity cervix-cuffs off Tsarevna Bootylicious the year previous. On a whim I also waved one of my Phwoar-crucifixes at the girl, the one with Jesus twerking his bum at the viewer and finger pressed against pouting lips. She saw that, clasped her hand over her mouth to stifle giggles—

—A hand swatted the back of my head.

"Knock it off, you," said Joan. "That bint knows full well how much her smile drives males nuts. You're smart enough not to fall for it. Right?"

"Oi come on, I know that," I insisted. "I'm okay."

"Right. Good. Jus' stay sharp. Look what happens if y' don't."

Good call. One venerable gent now sprawled KO'd beneath the giant's boots. The other three were brandishing brawn exceptional in folk a quarter their age, and were doing a surprisingly adequate job of strangling their opponent, or so I thought until I glanced at his face.

He was laughing. We could hear it inside the bus. He broke all three choke-holds at once.

But he'd not even noticed that the target of his affections had disengaged. The girl turned her spotlight-smile against the next queuer. He bloomed from aghast to sycophantic. She pulled him before the reporters' strobing cameras, and did something to him. Joan and I craned our heads to keep viewing the scene as the city square receded behind us, but no, too distant to see what she'd done. We went round a corner and the scene disappeared at last.

"I give her two weeks before the flame-out," said Joan, stony-faced.

"Two weeks? What do you mean?"

"My other Masters thesis is what I mean."

"What about it? I don't follow."

"Patience, grasshoppah," she manually twinkled. "So I've decided I wanna prop'ly master the profession of tactical flirtin', yeah? I finally got Stefan to admit there ain't nowt more he c'n teach me about blow jobs—"

"Oh you did? That's great! He's real stubborn sometimes."

"I'll say! So, he invited," Joan took a deep breath, "Lance-Corporal-Bombardier-Nectarperineum-Doctor-Dame Hedy Lamarr," inhale, "to exit retirement and teach me some one-on-one postdoc. Meanwhile, he proposed I pursue still further me flirtin'-studies."

"More flirting?" I scratched my balls in solemn thought,

Mike-style. “I’d been meaning to ask you all afternoon: was ‘flirting’ your rationale for wanking off that huge pack of Mongrel Mobster¹⁸s we bumped into in Versailles?”

“What?” Joan flashed an easygoing grin and chuckled. “Nah. Only a few thousand cuzzybros; unrelated to conventional flirtin’. No, the reason I’d brought up flirtin’ was, girl’s got game! Wrappin’ four Marshals round her finger at once, hardout.”

“You reckon all four were ...?”

“Ain’t it Marshals with the seven-star epaulettes? All four had ‘em.”

“Ah! Well spotted.”

“Thank’ee. She’d charmed the lot! An’ that huge oaf. Amazin’!”

“I feel you. But, ‘two weeks’?”

“Gettin’ to that. Her body language, like. Talent comin’ out her ears ... but inexperienced. Everythin’’s a novel thrill. She has no idea how to process her passions.”

“Doesn’t she?” I said sourly. “I wouldn’t know anything about that.”

“Don’t gimme that!” Joan exclaimed. “We’re all three rookies.” Dave glanced up from technical fellatio and met my eye and nodded vigorously and resumed slurpy duties. “No need to keep beatin’ yourself up over your Mary-passions gettin' the better of you back in January." Yeah, I'll explain all that later if I feel up to it. "It's all right, seriously," my lady-mate added. "But ... yeah, that gal there doesn't realise those other gents just wanna feel youthful. She's their lates' young thing. In time they'll move on. She won't. Two weeks to flame-out, I say."

¹⁸ For those unacquainted with the Mongrel Mob, do check out 50ftcl.it/mongrel-mob. Aren’t they dreamy? The dude in the seventh photo reminds me of Mike.

"... I see! Oh dear."

"Yeah." Joan frowned. "And. Er. Sorry if I was out of line jus' now in tickin' you off. Too grouchy?"

"Nah," I replied, feeling better already. "Her smile! Enchanting! Naturally you'd wish to caution me."

"Champion." Joan smiled too, wistful.

"Preach, sistah. Those reporters, though? They had an official look. Where might they fit?"

"Hrrmnr." Joan's brow furrowed. "... State propaganda, mebbe? Bardot's nuts for all that, or so say our notes. Keep civilian morale high, reassure 'em about—"

—The pan-bus intercom crackled into life. "Now hear this, my brutal babes." Stefan interrupted Joan's analysis via the intercom. All buses. "We alight in twenty minutes. First, we review the entire operational plan one last time. Tonight's fun is the culmination of the prior year of training. This is it!"

Chapter Six: The Imperial Guard

An orange-purple western smudge blushed twilight's last hurrah. The night was ever so clear and still and pristine. The snug warmth of sunset gave way to the crisp chill of night. Evening deepened. Laughter and song and espresso fumes ebbed from cafes. Drunkards staggered between lamp-posts.

Fire teams took up positions in our hundreds all around Imperatrix Bardot's official residence, the immense monolith of the Élysée Palace. And waited. And waited.

Why hundreds for a simple assassin job? Tactical blindness, that's for why. Determined prep aside, we honestly had so little idea of the Palace's garrisons or armaments or even booby traps. We weren't even sure Bardot was present, in her official alleged residence. But come on. She's the head of state. Bodyguard galore.

But our options were either: take a clumsy swing at our nemesis, or Britain falls. So here we were, surrounding the palace in full strength, cocks and/or clits at battle-steel, noggins crammed with all known French military intel, polished and ready to storm it and capture it against any and every type of resistance. Hell, Stefan had even quizzed us on besting Roman burning war pigs (marshmallows) and Greek Sirens (earplugs, and dinking their noses with a rolled-up newspaper).

And once we'd located Bardot, then what?

Elysee loomed through the nocturnal gloom, seven storeys high (our notes claimed three, but the uppermost four had a new-paint vibe). The last few lamps were in the process of winking out.

“Most remarkable,” Corporal Hiromi whispered. “Even when corner 77th recent, our understand nature of forces array against us.” Even today I still get comments re her broken English, so I’d better point out she’s ethnically Nihonese¹⁹. And I won’t hear any cracks about this from anyone who’d never attempted to learn another language as an adult. It’s bloody hard. Hiromi was referencing a nasty scrape about fifty of us had found ourselves in a few months back, sneaking through Siam’s jungles on a rural stealthy pub crawl and running slap into France’s notorious 77th Scrumptious Fusiliers, attempting a similar crawl in reverse with, if I may say so, rather less panache. Bloody cavewomen, honestly.

“Yeah,” muttered someone else. “The Scrumptious outnumbered us twenty to one, but like, the whole world knows their strengths and their weaknesses, tickle their perineums and they go all gooey, we thrashed ‘em in just a few yummy days.” Nods in the darkness. “Here? Blind.”

My fire team crouched in the evening darkness of a commandeered cafe. Its owners slumbered in rogered-out bliss out the back, courtesy moi, though not as you might think simply to prevent them raising alarm. The fire team radio communiques bounced and throbbed back and forth, including a particularly animated series of whispered messages from Dave on the Elysee's opposite side: turned out there's a surprisingly low ceiling to how many even genius-elite light infantry like Sex Commandos can conceal themselves in really shit terrain. You can't just dump a zillion of us on a bare city street and expect us to vanish, we ain't ninjas. Local circumstances had coerced Dave's fire team to abandon their attempts at stealth and concealment, so, as he informed us, his team simply strode into their nearest pub, heads held high, and announced themselves as the surprise stripper teams for the three separate hen parties already partaying it up. Considering the team's nine males were nude and oiled with eight-pack acrobat physiques and geosynchronous hip-gyrate-penis-helicoptering to the tune of Sweet Caroline, turned out this proved a real winner. That shit is our bread and butter. God, I wished we'd done the same here. I toyed with awakening our cafe's owners and attempting this.

"We're trusting to numbers, mate," a third person murmured in the tense silence. Might have been Mike. Couldn't tell, but likely not, the voice lacked Mike's telltale irritability. "No choice. Fuck sakes." Nah there it is.

I crouched in the cafe gloom, listening to my comrades. We trembled with pent-up aggression, aching for release ... and clueless about what or whom we might unleash it on. I hated it. We hated it.

“We’ve been here hours,” came another hiss. “When will we attack?”

Our radios vox-popped. “Ready, kids,” whispered Stefan’s crackly radio voice.

Finally.

“One last time,” he said. “Your standing orders: we attack from all sides. We think on our feet. Full autonomy. Speed trumps all. Don’t wait on my orders for anything. Locate Bardot. Detain her. Abduct her. If that proves impossible, we neutralise her, by any means you see fit. If in your fire team leader’s opinion that means lethal force, so be it. I shall answer to the world. Do keep the following uppermost in your mind at all times: the Imperatrix leaves this place under our control or not at all.”

He stopped talking. The silence was ghastly and exhilarating. My heart hammered like a drum solo²⁰.

“Move out.”

We leaped to our feet, silent as sine panthers. Our Raw Phwoar convent threads slid off like magic. We glistened in the moonlight, resplendent in our Sex Commando best: slim equipment belts containing a zillion fab micro-tools (and more on those later, a lot more); sports bras for the more hourglassey ladies; budgie-smugglers for those blokes preferring not to flop everywhere and take bystanders’ eyes out; fuck-all else. The Geneva Convention decrees that soldiers taking to the field must appear clad in uniform: we thus performed nods to officialdom and modesty via teeny-tiny fabric Union Jacks emblazoned across our urethras.

²⁰ ahem 50ftcl.it/drum

Overall? Lithe acrobats, superb and staunch and yearning to sex into oblivion France's finest. Let's do this eh?

My fire team crept from the cafe. The avenue segregating us from Bardot's pad was devoid of traffic. We bounded and sproinged like gazelles. In the distance we could see dim packs of brothers and sisters scurrying likewise.

Shit, this was tense. Scratchy nervousness clutched at my throat.

My group of fifteen approached a brick wall with wrought-iron railings atop squiggly metal filigree. They provided useful handholds for us to sproing up and over. Up we leaped and down we crunched onto a broad gravel path curving through trees and lawns.

All was silent and still——Apart from the guard patrol amid whom we'd landed.

They stared, gobsmacked, and already they cried out and snatched at their cervical sidearms—

—Bloody hell! I magicked stealthy blades into fists and pounced at the nearest, slashing with precision at his midriff. In a trice his pants vanished and the combo of my natural phwoar and war-paint pheromone turgidified his increasingly towering todger, I jinked my head around a clumsy punch from his upstairs regions, replaced knives, blurred my hand along his member, cupping his mouth with my other hand—

A silent stoush raged. Guards tried to brandish truncheons and discovered not only their equipment vanished but their lower ramparts plucked bare, and nethers already foaming into unstoppable pleasure. Lightning-speedy Sex Commando digits darted about their torsos and coaxed instant orgasms and my mood sparkled from horrible tension to energised action.

Yay! Taking out grunts is my bread and butter! We went through the guard pack like Spitfires through Sopwiths. One after another, they splooged and swooned——And yet, damn! A single guard had escaped tumbling from our pneumatic crush, a ragged ruin of whitey-tighties flapping around his waist, shouting French into his radio.

“Backup, backup!” He bawled. “We’re under attack—”

A spear-tackle from Hiromi and down he went, she leaped at his groin and oscillated fists and lips around his penis, he came helplessly in seconds and collapsed cold.

The guard’s radio tumbled from his hand, but spat a reply. “Report, Lance-Corporal!” crackled the voice of some prick, speaking the local lingo, can’t think which. “What happened?”

“Dammit! Almost trounce him!” snapped Hiromi, ignoring the radio reply. She jogged back to us. “No time to lose! Come on—”

As one, we dashed at the mansion proper, we flitted from one dark spot to another within its outer parks and gardens.

On a whim I snapped up the fallen radio and dashed forward with my team, sproinging over springy turf. “Lance-Corporal Blaise,” said the someone on the other end. “Report, I say!”

“Blaiise ‘eare!” I nasalled Frenchly, careful to keep my voice non-pant-y whilst silently sprinting, which take it from me is much harder than it appears. “False alarm, sir!”

“Good idea,” hissed another mate, “keep that bastard babbling, buy us time—”

Will do, will do ... Sweat broke out on my brow as I tried to think.

“Uh, had a slight weapons malfunction, but, uh, everything’s perfectly all right now, we’re fine, we’re all fine, here, now, thank you...” I gabbled Frogly. “...How are you?”²¹

Stefan had assigned my fire team a certain ground floor window. Hiromi arrived first, serious fist-pumping as she sprinted, god that gal could shift. Our memorised floor plans implied it was likely a vacant equipment room. From her equipment belt she whipped out a teensy glass-cutter, applied it to the window glass, scored a breach, reached through, opened the lock and then the window, all in under six hundred milliseconds. She piled in, the rest followed, inside were sheet-draped chairs and a door leading to, I consulted my mental palace-map, main ground floor hallway.

Two floors above us, we could hear chair-scrapings,

²¹ I’d watched Star Wars: A New Hope only the week before, you see: 50ftcl.it/hope foot-treads and general disturbance. Shit!

“Lance-Corporal,” declared my radio patsy, “your patrol has not arrived at its rally point. Is everything all right? What’s your status?”

Improvise, improvise, “A— group of drunkards tried to scale the wall. We delayed to detain them—”

A muffled roar of furious voices kicked off on the palace’s opposite ramparts.

“That sound Stefan,” declared Hiromi. “No point maintain silence, fan out or ravish all that move! This way!”

We grinned and shook extra sparkle into our forearms. Those of us male primed shafts quivering and ready for lightning ejacu-snipes; those of us female flexed forearms and wrists, champing at the bit to reduce enemy cocks to lax oblivion.

“Um uh there’s another really big group of drunkards attacking,” I gabbled into my radio, just riffing really. “God, they’re gorgeous!” For my troubles I got a round of chuckles and smirks from the fire team.

“What?” came a thundery sergeant-y radio bark. “Observe protocol, damn you!”

As us males ghosted our cocks hydraulic and turgid, our martial scrotums began glowing a cherry-red radiance, courtesy of our lab ladies’ genital-genetic bio-upgrades, standard for all Sex Commandos. We got all kinds of neat bio-gizmos; I’ll reveal them as we go.

One such bio-gizmo is my spankin’-new v3.11

Hiraguchi-&-Mookjai Mk. 8 triple-fister BattleCock.

“Report status, Lance-Corporal!” thundered my radio mate.

“My status, mate?” I replied. “Eleven point six inches! 44psi steel-hard pressure and rising! Nominal muzzle velocity 88m/s! Locked and loaded and primed for bear, watch your back, son!”

Splutters. “Blaise has been compromised,” we could all hear an officer-flavoured someone declare in the morass of background hubbub, “we’re indeed under attack from multiple bogeys, put that bourbon away, detain them first, booze second—” Gasps, then the connection cut. I laughed and flung the radio through a window with a happy smash.

“Why would you tell ‘em your stats, man?” enquired a colleague.

I laughed. “Nah, all bullshit, I’m way tougher than that! Eleven is nothing.” I smeared my excess precum across a tinkling chandelier overhead to emphasise the point.

We charged out the door, my soul headbanging funky Eurovision autopilot, fanned out into the hallway beyond, and came to a quickie halt, assess surroundings pronto. My heart thumped boom boom boom as we stabbed glares this way and that. We found ourselves at the bottom of quite a high-ceilinged hallway, strewn with the silhouettes of—statuary? Pianos? Dark, so dark, difficult to tell, it stretched some two hundred metres down the length of the Palace. Dim balcony silhouettes lined the walls. Though we couldn’t see any horrid gnarled cave-troll guard-defenders as such, the nocturnal stillness was broken by rumblings of colossal kerfuffles breaking out throughout the huge structure as our sister Sex Commando fire teams punctured its slumbering defences. Great! All going to plan! We——Blinding halogens snapped On.

Several dozen burly guards streamed onto a balcony opposite and above us. At last! They roared almighty harrumphs of alarm. My brutal trainings kicked in, and lucky too, for the rest of me damn near doubled up giggling at their idiotic uniforms, right out of Bonaparte the Humongous: beneath their insolent sneers puffed vast ruffs of fluffy throat cumulus, delicate lace gracing wrists and ankles, brass buttons galore, actual powdered wigs, beauty spots—and, get this, jackets and trousers of crushed velvet! Velvet! Ever tried getting spunk out of velvet?

Only later it occurred to me that just maybe their clownish apparel was designed to induce that exact time-waste reaction in every attacker ever, for the sickening realisation hit me that I'd goggled for over five hundred milliseconds, and they were already ripping their Velcro flies open and letting loose—

Quick! I kapowed a standard 2%²² cumshot right between the nearest guard's eyes, nine metres forward and up, with a strobe of crimson light. He screamed, clutched his face and tumbled from the balcony with a sickening crash. My male mates blammoed brotherly barrages through our enemies, sending them sprawling. My vision misted and I tumbled, dizzy, groaning, as any bloke might do after even after a 2% orgasm. I sucked in huge breaths to keep my vim up, in, out, in, out, get that O2 flowing—!

“—Backup! Backup!” bawled our new frenemies, taking shelter behind the balcony balustrades.

The floors rumbled as more gangs sprinted through the Palace towards us. Friend or foe? Hadn't the foggiest. Hell, even having the time to wonder about that, in a melee, was utter luxury. My male mates and I huffed, raw stamina ebbed back—

“We not permit fratricide,” bawled our leader Hiromi, “be of sure your targets! Males, identify, strike—”

Hideous spermy grapeshot burst from the surrounding nocturnal pitch from all directions. Crimson muzzle-flash! Aah!

I cranked serious battle-vim and the numerous bright bars of speed-blurred airborne gunk slowed to stodgy glaciers.

Another bio-upgrade intro! We've a Thing called battle-vim. Not sure what the exact underlying mechanism is, something something biocognitive hormone gradients blah blah blah, but suitable concentrations can help alter one's perception of the passage of time! Should I redline mine, I can make individual milliseconds tick tick tick and buy myself extra thinking time, we all can, it's awesome.

Anyhoo. Luminous flurries of purply-pinko neon-commie martial cumshots sprang sparkling from the turgid dankness ahead like a laser disco inside a kaleidoscope. I jinked and swerved my body around them like a special-forces dodgem. God, the sensation of redlining your muscle tensions when slowed fivefold is truly uncanny, my musculature thrummed and twanged as if God plucked each muscle striation like a particularly gruesome flesh harp, my team twirled and span around the illustrious Elysee hallway like punk swallows dodging overenthusiastic grapeshot.

Eight hundred and nine milliseconds later, the cumshot launchers made their appearance known. Luminous penises in their dozens exploded forth from the grimdark ahead, closely followed by the silhouetted and taut oiled torsos of, holy crap, Bardot's Own Imperial Guard, and then their heads and faces, and aargh. We'd heard of these pricks! Tough as nails m8! No uniform-distractions this time: that former lot may blunder at you in a great mob with a flourish and a sneer; this lot would just attack.

As one male these males charged us howling, closed the distance with hideous speed, their cocks braced into a pike-wall porcupine, they shouted something all at once, their vibes howled of gorgeous danger and seductive bastardry and the shattering of throbbing hearts, my adrenaline spiked, my psyche roared, my elite mates and I formed an implacable scrum and met their dread phwoar head-on.

Their psychic punch was obliterating, overwhelming. Aargh! Even through our sex-deadening war paint and world-class trainings, I could feel my libido twanging and twisting against my will. Part of me yearned for them to smear me across an oil canvas, gah. They shouted that same something again. My cock thrummed and weeped with a pneumatic desire to orgasm; my God these males were good. Don't doubt me, I surely gave as good as I got, but males this staunch could level crowds with a glance. Bardot's training seemed to foam from them as the air fogged thick with superb arrogant emissions. Their hands snaked at us from a million impossible directions, each lightning jab approaching my nethers closer than the last. They shouted, what were they shouting? "Intruders ID'd, yeah they actually are Brits, no I don't know how they got in either, surprised as you, we can interrogate them after we take them down," fat chance mate, but oh god I could barely hold them off, even equipped with battle-vim and BattleCock my counter-blurs seemed thick and clumsy and gauche—

Hiromi and our squad's females danced in and swandived and faceplanted our adversaries' cocks.

I deflated with relief. Vastly more similarities than dissimilarities abound re male vs. female Sex Commando tactics—the overall goal is to reduce your honoured enemy's sex-vim through orgasmic incendiaries 'til they giggle helplessly exhausted; but, as with normal sex, males average mightier strength in shorter spikes, whereas females tend to possess superior endurance and staying power. Us blokes may squeeze off precision cumshots like nobody's business, we can pulverise enemies at range, but even using 2% of my semen reserves at a time, my God it ablates us: for a few short seconds we stagger drunk on post-orgasm stupor.

But not the ladies! Females might average lesser physical strength, but the wise male Sex Commando closes to contact range against a female enemy at his peril. Psychic sex-fields simply energises her. They'll cum and cum and cum and though you can make them pass out from forced pleasure eventually, but for the first fifty or so, like a Hydra, they'll only strengthen.

Hiromi and her lady-mates teased the Imperial Guard attack apart without breaking. I slumped against the wall and sucked down shuddering breaths and shook my cock back to full battle steel.

And not a second too soon. A second horrendous horde of Imperial Guard bustled into view, mastodontesque females this time, and far further down the immense structure's hallway. Easily a hundred! They sighted us dastardly Brits, harrumphed in affront and alarm, then charged us fast to close the range. All inside six hundred milliseconds. Fifty metres, here they came, closing fast! Quick! My fire team and I swerved with frisky precision into ejacuspladge firing lines—

—Dave blocked our line of sight, his mug creased with his trademark gormless grin. From God knows where he'd pilfered a bottle of Shiraz. He necked it and toasted our advancing adversaries. “Beaut training routine, gals,” he crowed, swaying, “ain’t no Frog you can’t mimic!”

Splutters. “You fool they ain’t Brits,” snapped a Sex Commando firing line neighbour. His burly paw lunged to haul Dave aside——Argh. I shot out my own arm and grabbed his wrist.

“No, don’t,” I hissed in his ear as his astonished stare hit mine.

“But he thinks it’s practice!” the male spluttered. “He imperils—”

—Our view of the oncoming femme-storm tremored like a massive soap bubble inflated by a vacuum cleaner in reverse. Eh? Spiking my battle-vim as per regs revealed the effect as the spasming figure of Dave, or more accurately Dave’s hips, pistoning like a single-stroke diesel dragster, accompanied by his hands and lips blowing seven hundred sublime air-kisses a second, together flickering and spasming like a tailor’s dummy in a game of hacky sack.

Dave’s pelvic pyrotechnics splattered the oncoming howling flesh-phalanx with equal parts spunk and sweetness. The front rankers’ snarls collapsed into yelps as eleven constituent ladies found themselves bludgeoned against plush carpet like so many hourglassey skittles.

“Take that, Papists!” Dave chuckled over his shoulder at us, to a background of depleted yet enraged soldiery. “Enuf glaring, gents, I’ve left you a few!” I blinked and he’d already ceiling-strafted cackling up and behind us like that scene in Inception.

“The hell—” began my stropmy colleague, slack-jawed.

“I know I know I’ll explain later,” I gabbled, “here they come!”

He winced and nodded and the two of us joined our fire team now laying down a seriously lethal hosing of spunky firepower against the storm rampaging up the hall.

Forty metres, bam bam bam, I sniped one after another after another, techno crimson-strobe, nail ‘em between the eyes, closing to thirty metres, I struck Guardsfemale after Guardsfemale from her phalanx position, 1.5% shots this time, throttle back a tad, conserve ammo sonny, my fists blurred and pistoned up and down my BattleCock, now twenty metres, our cumsniped targets staggered clutching their faces and bleating and collapsed, they hit the marble floor and their counterparts behind immediately trampled them, still advancing fast, bam bam bam, the Hadean phalanx bled behind a shattered highway of swooning sweaty females, its closest ramparts howled sprinting with flashing eyes and shaking fistings, closer, closer, god, if those femme-fists get close enough we’ll be in serious trouble, ten metres, close enough to inhale their volcanic war-fragrances, bam bam bam, oh god this’ll be bloody close, five metres, we’d wrecked four fifths already but this only winnowed the weakest, the burliest femme-fatales yet staggered forward, forward, forward, with tactical breasts heaving and howling and their fingers splayed like dreadful talons thirsting to pluck my soul through my BattleCock, two metres, only time for one more orgasm, I'd damn well make it count, a single surviving ragged row of France's Imperial Guardsfemales launched themselves swan-diving directly at the row of male Sex Commando penises, fifty-two milliseconds before the finality of first contact I and my dozen brothers blammoed one final last-ditch 'shot right into and up their throats, the females' heads knocked back like basketballs, their bodies followed suit, cross-eyed, woozy, sniped, fainted cold, fab.

—God that was close! Plastered the lot, thank fuck. The entire hallway was strewn with smashed, swooning enemy Guard. Those few still conscious wobbled and flushed crimson with unwilling dark arousal.

Before the survivors could recover and reform, my fire team had advanced and closed to some contact-range of our own, forearms supple, fingers flexing, and we enticed a dozen lightning orgasms from each of them pronto. They snarled and battled like tethered tigresses, but there's nothing like a few thousand Sex Commando cumshot salvoes to reduce the vim of even the feistiest Frog, and sans nasty face-scratches and shitloads of post-spunk snizz, at last my fire team subdued the lot.

Relative silence.

"Okay so Dave's a tad special," I immediately informed my overly curious neighbour, who was already whirling stropily in my direction. "World-class mastery of all matters theological, complete dingbat otherwise, wait, didn't you read your briefings? Everyone's but Dave's spells this out."

"That fool spilled communion wine over my papers," my colleague snarled, "then offered to share his." Gah. Classic Dave. "Why in the crap did Sergeant Csintalan approve him for this mission, then?" he continued.

"Cause he despises violence and warfare and flees from both," I replied, "but turns out if you keep him convinced every adversary's an eager theology debater, he'll hump apart armies in seconds." Nods from other neighbours. "World-class soldering. Yes it's insane but gets Results, so please don't puncture his illusions." More neighbour nods.

"Theology debater?" The male spluttered. "I've never heard such claptrap. Does your Dave even know we're in France?"

"On our first meeting," I said, "he insisted my hometown in Mississippi was a shite Glasgow suburb and kudos to a muppet like me for escaping. I doubt he even knows France is a country. But France has Avignon Papists and trouncing Papists is all he cares about. Fill you in later, eh?"

The Sex Commando gave me a frazzled nod of acknowledgement and he and I returned to our snazzy duties. Right, where were we. My war paint had gone all translucent and had the most curious inner glow, like Bilbo Baggin's sword Sting around orcs, its blue wonderfully complementing my shining scrotum's crimson radiance. Amid Stefan's book-blizzards, I recalled the war paint's manual saying it glowed subtle blue after absorbing significant damage, something involving battling pheromone chemistries.

Say, where'd Stefan get to, anyway? The fire team had regrouped by now, flushed and panting and shiny with sex-sweat. My colleagues radiated staunch gorgeousness, I found myself fantasising about them, then started worrying my war paint wasn't working. I shook my head, no time to worry about that, move on.

"Everyone all right?" I called out.

Replies up the wazoo.

"Fine bud!"

"... All ohsweetJesus good, uh, good here!"

"Holy shit man that was tough!"

A few staggered bleeding, and had to be held upright by colleagues.

"We remain acceptable," Hiromi added, jogging from another velvety corridor with her own all-female fire team, massaging her jaw and waggling it. Her shining black hair hung bedraggled with sweat and her eyes blazed with overtaxed determination. "I am rusty! When this operation surpasses, more blow job training. I wish to bring all you males to forced orgasm below ten second. Here I cannot beat nineteen." Many other female Sex Commandos agreed and nodded vigorously.

"Likewise!" I said. "But blow jobs later, first Bardot! Where are our other teams? Where's Stefan?"

We fell silent and just listened. In other regions of the nocturnal Palace, seismic battling rumbled the building. It felt alive with battle as our teams moved this way and that, accompanied by shouts of alarm, gunfire, the lot. Sirens began curdling the night outside, surely reinforcements. Time is short, we'd best move it move it bee-hah-chiz.

One particular hallway felt in possession of the pungentest Stefanosity. "Down there." Hiromi and I pointed together. The fire team broke into a fast run, turned a corner and cannoned into another hall-filling skirmish. Another thirty-odd Sex Commandos did hideous battle against several great swarms of the broadest-penised males I'd ever seen, with Stefan at its core jousting nine at once. Our leader roared like the horny hounds of hell, holding his own against the lot.

The sight stole my breath away. He snatched up two enemy skulls to tittyfuck then simply squidge asunder the snarling cock of a third, plucked a fourth gent by his scrotum and hurl him out the nearest window, and I'm not talking about feather-light creampie, we're talking serious Hulkmeisters. Dear god. He simply punched a fifth male, using the head of a sixth as a knuckleduster. I'd never witnessed him, or anyone, wage war like that. When I'd first joined the Sex Commandos, chin still damp with mothers' milk, from morbid curiosity I'd asked the fellow to spar with me at his proper full battle strength.

Always the same response: his eyes would grow distant, then he'd chuckle, shake his head, and decline.

At the time it irritated the crap out of me, but now I understood. He'd have snapped me in half. At full war vim, even through my trained-up professionalism, he was terrifying.

Still, no excuse not to reinforce. We charged the skirmish at its flanks and in seconds detonated the lot.

"No time for thanks," thundered Stefan. "Swiftly, the others are being overrun!"

We sproinged back into motion. We thundered along the Palace's length. Random civilians—servants, groundskeepers, guests—began making bleary-eyed appearances from random doors. Most were hardly even worthy of a glance, Sexy smoochies and down they went. Dozens more scampered howling. In a particularly nasty firefight, against some two hundred Imperial Guardswomen, from the corner of my eye I chanced upon a single slim blonde figure gazing down on us from yet another high balcony, coolly surveying the palace ripping to shreds around her.

Bardot? Perhaps!

Too dark to tell, the figure just stood there, disregarding the battle-spunk spring tides crashing with rage around her——A desperately concretey and veined penis eclipsed her. Its owner tried to plunge the damn thing down my throat, apparently succumbing to the delusion this might trounce me. I permitted the appendage slurpy throat-passage, nose-booped the gent's pubes, exploded and drained him pronto, he collapsed cold midway through an astonished thumbs-up, I snuck another look up, but alas the figure had vamoosed.

Onward! Sex Commando waves charged throughout the huge palace, along endless marble-floored corridors, up and down grand staircases, through immense cathedral-sized banquet halls in our dozens, in hot pursuit of the scarlet strobing of hawtly erotic battle. We cannoned into other sprawling skirmishes and liberated our own colleagues.

Fab snatches of dialogue, too, from the Froggy defenders: “Who are these nutjobs?” “That’s Maureen and her nieces routing too, we’re losing troops fast,” “Surely this is not another drill, not even the XIIth are this brutal,” “Deck Two’s defence has collapsed entirely, fall back, damn you,” “All quiet on the ol’ vox-pop about impromptu drills, Big Sally knew fudge-all ‘bout surprise attacks neivver,” “Surely cannot be genuine, the Velvet Vice would have alerted Empire Command to their intrusion,” “girl have you seen that latest male? Enemy or no, he fucks like a pile driver—”

I think Dave earned that last one! Attaboy! As intertwining fire team dubstep dance-offs overpowered varied obnoxious diversities of exotic Sexy defenders, the floors became ever more greasy and slick with a thousand thousand body fluids. Grand sprawling carpets became ever more soaked and sodden, squads splishy-splashed through ankle-deep spunk, grand granite staircases became frothy cataracts. Great mounds of multicoloured foam threatened ground-floor visibility. Bubble torrents cascaded from doors and windows. Pungent pongy tornadoes twirled up dumbwaiters and down corridors. Sex Commando squads in their dozens moonwalked this way and that, staggered blotchy and fatigued, and at great length and with great effort, at last, at last, cleared the entire palace.

I glanced at my new-fangled digital chronometer, certain many hellish hours had passed. But only fifty minutes! Really? My limbs ached, my testicles thrummed with exertion, my head drooped with exertion and fatigue. Goddamn! We'd just battled Bardot's best, and holy crap, exhaustion already claimed me.

Oh? Oh—yes! I'd forgotten all about it. Liquid testosterone solution with a few other chemical goodies, from the same lab ladies who'd magicked up seismic battle-vim and vibrant war paint and volcanic BattleCocks. I snatched a slim flask of the stuff off my equipment belt and downed it in one.

In a trice the mental fog fiddled into zilch. Biosubsystems aplenty sprang back to supple pristine glory, I felt jazzed-up and sharp as all hell and oh yes fuckin' come on

I punched the air and gave a shout and barely restrained myself from humping the furniture. My entire body thrummed with volcanic tension.

So did everyone else. In five seconds flat every last one of us ascended from exhaustion and fatigue, to fresh, sparkling come-at-me-bro. Oh sure, it's a stim not a fuel, we'd all pay a price, but we wouldn't pay it tonight.

"Where's Bardot?" thundered Stefan. "Locate Bardot!"

"We've searched the place top to bottom!" called out Joan's voice down the other end of the Palace. I tried to crane over the friendly forest of splendidly muscled torsos, slick with the sweat and grime of battle, but couldn't get a glimpse of her as she continued. "No sign anywhere—"

"She must be here!" said Stefan. He stared up and down the combined room/hallway we found ourselves in, some kind of state dining room I think. It was bloody huge, golden filigree walls, mahogany floors, proud Imperial purple carpeting, and strewn everywhere with the sweat-soaked casualties of battle. He shouldered his way over to a miserable-looking group of civilians hunched and shivering into a corner.

"You there!" he bellowed at a young fellow who'd probably be quite dreamy if he wasn't caked with sweat and grime. "You told me earlier Bardot was present, Mr. esteemed and venerable suckah, you told me her Divine Guard would destroy us. Where is she?"

"You 'orrible basterd," the man slurred, eyes flashing. "Ah will nevar betr—"

His attempts at patriotism were cut off mid-syllable as, in a trice Stefan had the man's pants down and balanced on the razor's edge of orgasm. The man leaped to his feet, or tried to, and other Sex Commandos had to hold him down.

Stefan glared, then paused, frowned, and attempted a grin. “Ah. Foolish of me.” He slapped his forehead, then stared the man in the eyes. “The British are Hump Summit signatories too, you know. This torment is recognised by international law as by-the-book and consensual.”

The man gasped, wide-eyed. “Oh my word. You are indeed Brits?”

“Well I’m not. I’m Hungarian. But most here are. We will ravish you and you will adore it.”

The male relaxed at last, then grinned grimly. “We shall see. Proceed.”

The sergeant nodded at a few of the nearby Sex Commandos. “I suspect this fellow enjoys nipple-play. Be so good as to indulge him.”

They twinkled away the fellow’s upper garments and started lapping at his nipples. One more lubed up a finger and started caressing his prostate. The stricken man squealed and mewled as my exquisitely skilled colleagues worked their devastating magicks upon him.

He whimpered and turned scarlet.

“Where is the Imperatrix?” asked Stefan from around the man’s penis, sucking gently. “I won’t ask you again.”

The man squirmed and squirmed and hung limply in their arms, whimpering, then squirmed again. “Ah won’t—won’t betray—”

“You two tongue his ears.”

Two more Sex Commandos did so. The man howled and wrenched his tethered body this way and that.

Just watching torture like this was making me ache in sympathy.

At last the man broke bawling. “Behind the bookshelf please I cannot take more please please—”

“Investigate,” called Stefan. Sex Commandos nearest the shelves leapt to it. Sure enough, prodding produced rattling, and levering off shelves produced, aha, a plain door leading who knew where?

“Good boy,” Stefan praised his prisoner. “Together, folks,” addressing the assisting soldiers, “a level nine orgasm for our guest’s trouble. On three, one two three—”

The man exploded in ecstatic howls, painting the ceiling white, then swooned cold.

“He won’t be able to walk for days,” he chuckled. “And now. Passage time. Finest troops to me—”

A creak and the door had already opened and Imperatrix Bardot had already teleported into the midst of her would-be assassins like she held the property deeds to every testicle in the universe.

Chapter Seven: The Indomitable, The Irresistible, The Inevitable

She'd already bipped four friggin' metres ahead. How the hell had she managed that? Already this was going wrong, and speaking of wrong, just applying one's gaze unto her produced a horrid squirmy illusion-vibe, as of only one eye locking-on, and the other eye could spy naught but seas of supple Sex Commando flesh—

—Nine milliseconds later, the gonad-concreting commenced.

Whoa! Every local genital stiffened desperately, the thrumming rigidity shockwave centred from Her, expanding a metre every twelve milliseconds. Stout BattleCocks in their dozens corkscrewed crazily as their owners lost local control, inexorable fortified vaginas flushed and drenched and exploded and kapowed their clients a clear foot off the ground. Brows sopped, muscles spasmed, glands gushed, gashes gawrshed, eyes rolled, passions volcanic'd, wills wankered, willies whiplashed. This dame was dynamite.

At some point Her eyes stared their strobey way through mine——And. Holy. Fuck.

Shit. How could I phrase this? It may well be my professional business to coax inexorable erotic tensions through any and every organic adversary, and I do mean ‘every’. You’d be surprised how trivial it is to give erections to conifers.

But but a mere instant of glances and and ohgod my soul bleated that Her mastery and/or mistressy at blasting a strapping male’s heart with searing, unstoppable erotic tension was second to none. The Sex Commandos’ years of remote critiques meant nothing, nothing: in the flesh, She could put Aphrodite to quivering shame.

The eros-feels howled from Her like stellar gales igniting mighty nebulas.

In that instant I understood at last how She’d conquered France.

Okay fine gush time. This’ll sound ever so sappy and corny, but I honestly don’t care. I’d never experienced any female like her. She was a natural at harnessing oceans of impossible longing. Her entire being screamed sex; perfect, pristine, translucent, shimmery sex.

Even to-day as I type this screed in the afternoon-tea-time of my life, I’d never encountered the like. In my twenties, right then and there, it overwhelmed me, it submerged me, it completed me. Her sensuality was galaxy-class, but, and here’s the catch, unattainable, unreachable, ungraspable. In the intervening decades I’ve dated and mated deliciously pretty females, slinky females, sprightly females, slinky and sonorous, dearhearts and wankers, obelisks and brats—and a fair few males too, let’s be fair—and our attraction was two-way, mutual. If someone floors me, then likely enough I floor them too.

A single glance at Bardot, and your sinking heart will bleat at you that your affections shall remain hopelessly lopsided. You'd bleat with the injustice yet plead for sloppy seconds. She'd transfix abysses of helpless, desperate attraction deep through your soul, and flick back micro-squibs of disinterest. Sufficient to keep you on your hind legs pleading for tasty treats and not one iota more. She'll take and take and take and extract nourishment for her next conquest and abandon your shattered wreck.

Over the years I'd had so many chats with so many sweethearted females, re their relationships with their own looks and beauty. Physical beauty is a multi-headed hydra indeed. Some stunners have no idea how much their looks warp their neighbours' psyches, they'd always thought everyone they met was being astoundingly nice to them because people are just nice overall, right? They were astonished and dismayed when they later discovered the tragic truth, often unfortunately upon hitting middle age: an oft-repeated refrain was, with each passing day, their youthful radiance dims just that teensy bit more. The Sex Commando lab ladies, however, inform me they're working on a particularly ambitious snazzy-package to trounce exactly this, so stay tuned, baby.

Some female beauties discovered that other (straight(ish)) female strangers of all beauty-levels could indeed remain amiable ... until neighbouring males returned her flirts. More than a few female neighbours then hardened in a heartbeat into snooty bitchy ice-queens. Most didn't and remained rad and gnarly. But enough surely froze. Loads of lady-stunners tell me they'd resigned themselves to the grim necessity of sizing up inevitable competition upon entering any room: many-to-most other ladies present typically brightened sunny and warm, but certain others oft considered themselves the local Looker, and goshdarnit a gorgeous challenger approaches, knives out bitch.

Some ladyfriends despised this knives-out phenom: they surely cherished their looks yet loathed the looks' social domino effects, and often dressed frumpily to downplay this.

Knives-out repelled other gals less. Some knew they really shouldn't, part of their psyche felt awful about meeting a new social group, female strangers, affectionate friends, pleasant rapport. But they just couldn't help it. They just had to beam at attractive neighbours, revel in their attentions, then bask as these other females' latest coldnesses clattered the group-vibe to itty-bits. The instigators informed me they partly hated repelling otherwise quite nice ladies, but so much of their psyche exulted in the delicious pleasures of the socio-sexie spotlight.

Others actually amplify knives-out. I find such people repellent so I seldom chat to 'em directly, but we've all witnessed it a million times: they'll happily harvest any and every social-beauty-flirt opportunity they can grasp. Many hadn't paid for a drink in their lives. Or a car. Or a chateau.

There is no psyche they'll not attempt to twist round their physically beautiful fingers. Behind them lie strewn affairs, divorces, alimony, mansions, boytoys and fat, fat cheques. Knives-out is their way of life.

The Imperatrix brandished the mightiest knives-out vibe I have ever encountered.

Meeting her gaze was like staring down the Large Hadron Collider three days into a meth bender. But she apparently muddled her knives-out vibe with, get this, a horrible orange-pink-zigzagged male tuxedo suit jacket, just the jacket, evidently tailored for an extra-wobbly sumo wrestler; underneath this, a bikini top with cups styled like brain hemispheres²³; a pair of Billy Connolly banana boots²⁴; and a funkatronic mauve-neon codpiece, wait no an actual hydraulic-piston strapon replete with a heavily scuffed beer-bottle opener ending, and zero other apparel, not even undies.

Any bugger rocking merely one such item, let alone all four, would be my cherished mate forever. But it was a testament to her literally awesome knives-out vibe that I'd intuited zero. I'd already goggled at her for damn near a thousand milliseconds, precious time squandered, her volcano-vibe simply overrode staunch trainings like chocolate soldiers on a boiling water bed—

—But come on! Galaxy-glass flirts is one thing,

²³ One of these babies: 50ftcl.it/brain-bra

²⁴ Do check out 50ftcl.it/banana-boots. What a shot! What a look! I feel green with envy I don't have a pair myself.

physically overwhelming this Imperatrix is quite another. Two hundred Sex Commandos hadn't smashed her Palace flat simply for bog-standard flirts. Detain her, destroy her, she's only a slip of a thing. Right? I readied a punch to the ol' noggin and attempted to advance.

But she stabbed the same smouldering stare in all directions, didn't she. And the psychosexual knives-out thunderclap was unbelievable, impossible, tectonic, ultimate. War paint boiled off Sex Commandos in their dozens: their gonads exploded like rows of champagne bottles uncorking²⁵, squeaking with impossible dismay and defeat, colleagues I'd been honoured to witness taking on five hundred Bavarian gentleman-sausages hourly and one-handed were bursting where they stood, until, until——Sergeant Stefan stomped her stare flat.

“Fortuna! At last the rematch!”

He barged through the wilting crush, got a line-of-sight on her, then hurled a huge wheel of Parmigiano at her head, God knows where he'd got it from.

The Imperatrix jinked her noggin around it like a dodgem without breaking her stare, her tailbone-length bloneness twirling behind. By the time the massive cheese bounced off Bridget's maternity bra four metres behind, Stefan had already inhaled so deeply his ribcage went spherical.

²⁵ Like so: 50ftcl.it/champagne

“DETAIN HER.”

Right.

One battle-vim tactic I’ve found more phunky-phresh than most is to keep a mental tally of the passing milliseconds. I call it my cognitive brawl o’clock.

As hundreds mobbed Bardot from all sides I reset mine to zero.

She stood her ground, still silent, lip at last curling in what all my trainings insisted was little more than a vacant sneer. Four hundred and nine milliseconds.

I cranked my battle-vim and bunched musculature, then too leaped at her. Oh sure, facing down her flirt-knives may feel like Megatron deepthroating a Tesla coil, but she doesn’t appear all that physically imposing, appearances ain’t everything, Joan and Hiromi both boast stature smaller yet bang out two-hour marathons and military-press Minis and lick through Sandhurst, but there’s a world of difference between ‘compact’ and ‘slim’ and Bardot is most assuredly the latter so physically thrashing her will be a piece o’ piss.

Won’t it?

Staunch punchy Sex Commando waves stampeded Her from every side. I couldn’t shake my stink of dank dread, so I reasoned let’s not take chances. I redlined my battle-vim and time slowed to a crawl.

My noggin luminesced with the extra-hefty nutrient uptake. You get all kinds of hilarious side effects whilst fully tempo-cranked: as milliseconds become decades, the mere act of glancing makes your eyeballs feel like leaden moons as they rotate serenely in your skull.

I squizzed this way and that, my extra-ocular musculature twanged like plump bungy cords and heaved my eyeballs like boulders in hawt pursuit of Indiana Jones. Tick tick tick, one thousand seven hundred and seventeen milliseconds. Concentric rings of Sex Commandos sprang and pounced ever closer around the Imperatrix like penisey bear traps, closer, closer, only a few feet away, sweat and other fluids steamed off all exposed flesh like comets' coronas, Bardot's flirt-knives-vibe shunted the sweat-vapours radially away, a million steamy tangents—

—Wait, what? Vibes are just emotion, how could they literally boil liquids? Something was seriously screwy here. Yet hers could and did, shee-yit, the nearest hundred-odd attackers were all redlining their vim too, we all slo-mo-glanced at one other, maintain synchronous solidarity, yup the others too intuited the queerness. The nearest Sex Commando thunder-fists were now only a foot from contact, an inward porcupine of grasping hammer blows.

Yet she just stood there! Placid and tranquil and eyes galactic voids. The hell? The milliseconds ticked and ticked, two thousand and four, I yet danced perhaps five metres and closing, couldn't easily see through the crush of supple flesh, nineteen colleague'd Galvanic vaginas now eclipsed the Imperatrix's deceptively delicate face.

Two thousand and sixty one milliseconds blurblurblur forty Sex Commandos sprawled tumbling.

Holy fuck what was that?

All eyes oscillated from the Imperatrix to the crumpling ring and back to the Imperatrix. Her blank peepers blazed anew and she performed a few cheeky mauve-neon codpiece thrusts and I blinked and in three milliseconds she'd already jinked half a metre.

What! How's that possible? The Imperatrix twinkled and blazed and she twiddled herself past and behind a dozen Sex Commandos, their brutal hammer-blows proved glacier treacle compared to her snazzy slap-speedies, she jazzed and vibed and mere waves of her slender arms were enough to slice through grizzled Commando vibe-veneers like Buicks through tampons. I stared and blinked and she'd already twirled four metres through the crush, moonwalking like a freaky tarantula, the merest caresses sufficient to kapow involuntary warp-speed cumshots from the most savage, grizzled veterans I knew, dozens of diagonal ejacuspladges had already started spaffing the chandeliers, ohhfuck it's all going wrong! How?

Another dozen crumpled and withered against her sultry stares. Every place her Look flicked, Sex Commandos collapsed. But we're Britain's best; we don't do routs, we triumph or we perish in the attempt. I desperately attempted to extract even a little sense or intel: yes she was moving like steel lightning, faster than any performance I'd ever attempted, to match her moves without snapping the tendons from my bones I'd have to grow bio-upgrades out my bumhole, yet her musculature was exhibiting zero snapping or even exertion, she flowed and she shimmied like literal magic.

But what else could we do? On we charged, shattering against her. At one point Dave flicked one of his classic left-hook beauties from behind, she yielded her head around the punch without even looking, spun on her heel, swiped her hand backwards, scything through another nine Sex Commandos, and ending her swipe with Dave, who exploded out cold.

After reducing fully half of the strike force to a slushy sauna, her expression flickered and she staggered.

Thrumming and bursting with frustrations and for my own turn to attack, my heart started creeping up from bitter defeat to a ray of hope. She's not invulnerable? Get in quick!

At last I could see an opening. Stefan himself now engaged her, mad eyes shining, he augmented his grizzled silverback sex-techniques with full-on barroom-brawling right- and left- hooks. He could absolutely smash ribcages, his musculature thrummed and vibed like steel cables, he was giving the fight his all, grinning like a jolly cactus, having the time of his life. He caught her full on her pristine jaw, she reeled flying, yet still not a gasp. In a flash she'd re-sprang vertical—but for the first time she actually appeared uncertain. Blood slo-mo-sprayed from a split lip, hanging in the battle-vimmed air.

Quick! I dashed towards them, battle-vim infraredlined, my nut a galaxy of focused fury.

Stefan thundered a fist like a planet right at her slim jaw. Brawls when most or all participants brandish battle-vim is truly nuts, talking becomes difficult or impossible and you can only glare. I wanted so badly to liase with Stefan, but I don't think he knew the nature of Bardot's morbid powers either. The milliseconds ticked by, I'd lost count of how many, sloppy, and Stefan's fist descended.

Bardot's hands yet blurred impossibly and his brute hammer-punch somehow deflected. How? Only now did his own expression flicker. Another micro-instant and I was already jumping airborne in search of an opening to smash her apart, any opening, and she'd already slipped within Stefan's guard, she attempted to grasp his penis—

—I cannoned into her from the side, one hand closing over her face, the other curled in a thunder-fist of my own—

—Her speed-blurred counterslap was a razorblade snicked through my soul. I staggered backwards, my cock queasily concreting. My hindbrain wept at me, I'd always thought I was somewhat dominant, but brought before Her I felt helpless and nauseous in flavours I'd not dreaded possible, so many whimpers of worship her worship her, cerebral battle-vim control drizzled asunder, events were reverting to regular time-passage, aargh, but what the hell, there was no way I was revealing weakness before Stefan of all people, still locked in mortal struggle with Her, and so few Sex Commandos still vertical, most formed slushy snowdrifts

—I trembled upright and stumbled over Joan's inert torso.

I glanced horrified down at her. She mumbled something in her slumber.

Stefan's enthusiastic bawls cut off like I'd switched off a radio.

Dreadful silence and stillness.

I snapped my head back up.

"At last."

For the first time, Bardot spoke.

"The trap, sprung; the prey, caught."

Her voice was a silky-smooth wet dream, and sounded for all the world like an oildrum of T. My precum flowed like a tide. Dear god.

"There remains one Sex Commando," I croaked, "missy, who yet stands tall."

The Imperatrix's face creased in an apparently innocent giggle that might have been rather endearing had her eyes not remained numb voids. "I refer to Csintalan alone, sweetie darling," the intonations intoned. "A thorn in France's midriff since time immemorial. The five thousand Old Guard strewn yonder gladly perished for even an outside chance at the thrice-accursed Cossack Cock-Ring's ambush and recapture, for ambush it was." It laughed again, louder. "Foolish boy, did you think your Velvet Vice intrusion remained undetected?" Snort. "Fifty francs says Csintalan chirped about bloody Fortune the entire way in. He's not changed one bit since the old days." Glare. "And who are you, foolish boy, to claim proximal notoriety?"

I think the only bit of my brain not gunked with horny dread was that responsible for my voice. "I? I, I smashed your invasion of the Jackson Belter Papacy," I heard myself croak. "For I am the Boytoy of Jackson's Pope Magdeline V, the Domina, the Pontifatrix, the Cajun-Crusher. I'm your despair." Hey yeah I actually am! The evening's battling had shoved the hilarious events of a few months back clean from my mind. Ha. Inner defiance blazed anew. The abyssal tides of Bardot's inexorable femme-phwoar tonguing my hindbrain so greedily simply dissolved like pooey ether, for I'm a friggin' Sex Commando baby. My fists clenched and my BattleCock fortified and my quadriceps bunched.

But the Imperatrix's lip twisted for thirty-nine milliseconds. Her knives-out vibe whiplashed my taint. "Csintalan's latest plaything," came the coo, "no doubt. Imbeciles invariably amused him. Little wonder I ranked your danger least, queued your trouncing last. Your kind parasitizing the Domina's prestige, however, fails to amuse me. Sweetie darling, your attempts at a Mississippi accent would shame Dick van Dyke. Your pickled brainstem will make a fine gift to the New Orleans Supreme Mugwump—" —Don't you dare talk shit about my Mary. I launched myself at the Imperatrix in ragged fury. Brawl time biatch, close to flirting-range, end this or perish trying.

Halfway through my trajectory I only then noticed that Her banana boots were steel-tipped. And cheerful banana-yellow via blackbody radiation, i.e. blazing-hot.

With speed beyond belief, Her arm blurred so fast it formed vapour cones, caught me by the throat, then kicked me in the balls so hard I literally hit the ceiling.

My loins exploded with desperate molten agony, bubbling, charring, aargh. The last of my martial discipline ablated against her, I smacked into the floor with a sickening crash, air crushed from my lungs, my torso bounced waist-high, the Imperatrix seemed to sprout 27 million extra arms like that Hindoo God of Kitteh-Scratches, and they all spanked me at once.

Like a cat in a bathtub I somehow windmilled upright, just barely possessed the vim to dodge a second radiant boot whirring an inch past my head, but sadly not enough to also swerve from exactly six hundred and twelve palm-slaps, distributed uniformly across my torso. You may think I'm joking or exaggerating, but much later I stepped through these bio-upgraded memory recordings frame by frame, counted the slaps, and no seriously there were literally 612. To this day I still have no idea how She managed it. So I jinked my jaw to dodge this thermonuclear Boot Two, simply tanked the slaps, zero choice man, blacked out for nine hundred and three milliseconds, rebooted, then discovered I'd already somehow returned to my feet and bolted fifty metres down a plush-carpeted Palace corridor. With another 493 slaps in hot pursuit (yup counted them too), I attempted to spin on my heel and re-engage but all 493 spanked my magnificent martial butt-cheeks mauve with loathsome precision, this was appalling, I'll never re-establish contact range without eating another gazillion whacks and blacking-out anew, aargh, attempted this nonetheless like the goddamn champ I am, 1192 slaps later I came to yet another fifty metres away almost on the other side of the Palace, dear god, so with screaming scrotum and dire patoot I simply ran for it. I had just enough sense to hurl a baby grand or something at Bardot's infinity-grasping figure, then put my head down and just routed.

I barrelled down another hallway. Ooh fuck Bardot's breath on my neck or was I just hallucinating—a blur of huge windows, one's jimmied open, the earlier work of one of our team? Who cares who cares just go go go, my adrenaline-soaked muscles bunched and thrummed and I dived through, hit the lawn outside rolling and bolted for the boundary wall.

Atop it I risked a glance back. I could see the slushy mounds of conked-out comrades I was abandoning to Her, my heart screamed duty duty but I couldn't rescue them! Could I?

I couldn't spy Bardot anywh—a blonde blur blurred, She materialised at a window, staring straight through me with those skin-crawling void-eyes. With one hand she kerchunked the lid off a bottle with her beer-opener strapon, and with the other she clicked her fingers. Both sounds carried across the midnight deep.

And squads of armoured males with big, big roundshot launchers boiled into the halls from a hundred hidden alcoves.

What really stung was the affront. Even through my bollocks-based torment my mouth fell open. She raised her opened bottle to me in a toast and guzzled grog and, and did she really just wink? She'd only been toying with us! She could have ordered those extra guards in at any time—

A roundshot snapped past me, plus many shouts, then another shot and yet more. Fuck! Move! I galloped like a greyhound Gollum along and off the Palace wall then down a random street.

Only then did the magnitude of our disaster really hit me.
Oh, bloody hell.

France will skin Britain alive.

It'll skin Britain alive and it's all our fault. We charged in blind, we underestimated Bardot's powers and cunning, we gambled, and we lost everything.

More shouts, goon gangs, hot pursuit, and now roundshot! A well-aimed lead ball splunched a flesh divot off my left shoulder. White-hot pain streaked through me. I choked on a scream and ran into an alley.

Red mist choked my vision. Time lost all meaning. My sarcasm neuroturbines informed me it was Melodramatic Douchebag time, and Swoon therefore overcame moi.
